Letters still rain here. This department is not for Questions and Answers. We don't read musical manuscripts, and while we wish the native composer, male or female, well, we cling to the antiquated notion that a public performance is the best test of a composition. Hence the heartburnings. Hence the result that even if we had the time we shouldn't answer futile letters. Not precisely bollie, this, though necessary to preserve our sanity. For example, echoes of that Calico Cat have not died down. We were reminded by numerous correspondents that the Gingham Dog swallowed the feline. As an old "fan" of Eugene Field we protest that if the dog had been lugged in the article would not have been written. That's plain, isn't it? Much fun was poked after our statement that only three years ago Morgan Kingston was mining coal in Wales. The joke is decidedly on us, as the tenor in question has been singing twice that time here. One of Tom Bull's pleasantries, it was. As to the woman composer, the "whistling hen," that is a dangerous topic which we willingly forego, as we fear picketing on the street outside this office. It is also dangerous to criticise adversely a pianist or violinist of the Slavic race. Consider the case of Paderewski. Years ago I playfully called him Thaddeus of Warsaw. History may repeat itself. The great Chopinist may wear the laurels of the statesman. The other night I asked Felix Leifels, manager of the Philharmonic Orchestra, what instrument General Pilsudski, a prominent figure just now in Poland, played, and Mr. Leifels laconically answered: "Don't know. The name sounds good to me." And when you come to think of it the name does fall pleasantly upon thirsty ears. Pils-Suds! Again let us intone "Oh, Anderson, my Demi-John."

Far from being types are Charles Henry Meltzer and Pietro Floridia, though occasionally they may be seen at the opera. Both men musicians and scholars, they are deeply concerned, as all good citizens and true should be, about the translations of the Wagnerian texts. We have heard Wagner sung in Italian, French, and English, and naturally prefer it in the original, because it rings truer. But as Wagner in German is unthinkable at present remain English or Italian. Under which king? I prefer Italian, as probably Wagner would if he were alive, but if it is to be sung in the vernacular then let it be in the effective translations of Mr. Meltzer, who preserves the accordance of phrase and rhythm. Witness his version of "The Valkyrs." Mr. Floridia, who has enjoyed the friendship of Cosima Wagner, himself a pupil of von Bülow, a composer, conductor, and pianist, is a literary man of ability, at one time an associate of Arrigo Boito. He is now a resident of this city and has made faithful translations of the Wagner operas in Italian. I have read a letter sent to him by Boito, for me the master librettist. So when Manager Gatti-Casazza is ready next season with his Wagner revival he will have two artistic translations for his cosmopolitan taste.

Mr. Floridia relates an interesting anecdote about Puccini, in whose company he was at the third performance of "Falstaffo" at Milan. Puccini later in the evening was not so enthusiastic. "My dear Floridia," he said, "if you or I had composed that opera, public and critic would have killed us outright. All the laughing is on the stage—never in the audience. But it is Papa Verdi and it must go." The answer to Puccini's critique is his own "Gianni Schicchi." It is his attempt at a "Falstaffo," and a clever attempt it is. Truly, all the world's a comedy. Changeless change. There are no types, only men and women.

GARDEN AND "GISMONDA"

FRENCH lyric art dominates the opening nights of the Chicago Opera Association season in New York, beginning next week, Monday, Jan. 27, at the Lexington Theatre. Six works representing France and only one by an Italian are on General Director Cleofonte Campanini's list for his first week. Two are operas new to New York and heard recently at Chicago for the first time in America, while others are repetitions from his répertoire of a year ago at the Lexington, or long before at Hammerstein's Manhattan.

Henri Fevrier will again be the composer of the opening night's opera, as he was with another work last year. His new opera, "Gismonda," scheduled for the Monday première, has Mary Garden in the title rôle, with Charles Fontaine, a French tenor from the Paris Opera, heard recently in the West. Others are Alfred Maguenat, Gustave Huberdeau, Marcel Journet, Louise Berat, Octave Dua, Lodovico Oliviero, Warren Proctor, Desire Defrere, Constantin Nicolay, Marie Pruzan, Frederica Downing, and Alma Peterson.

Campanini will conduct the opening, and there will be incidental dances by Andreas Pavley, Serge Oukrainsky, and their Russian ballet.

More New Singers Coming.

Tamaki Miura will reappear Tuesday, the second night, in "Madame Butterfly," which she sang here with the Boston company two and three years ago. The novelty of a Japanese in the Oriental rôle will be matched with an American, Forrest Lamont, as Lieutenant Pinkerton, U. S. N. Others in the cast are Irene Pavloska, Giacomo Rimini, Alma Peterson, Vittorio Trevisan, Desire Defrere, Francesco Daddi, and Constantin Nicolay. Giorgio Polacco will return as conductor.

Yvonne Gall, a soprano, and John O'Sullivan, tenor, both from the Paris Opera and new to New York, will make their joint début in a Wednesday evening performance of "Romeo and Juliet," which they have sung recently in Chicago. Also new to this cast since last Winter will be Auguste Bouillier, Irene Pavloska, and Marcel Journet, with Marcel Charlier again conducting.

Operas by Fevrier and Leroux.

A second Fevrier opera is the Thursday bill, when his "Monna Vanna," which led last season, will be repeated with Miss Garden and the same cast valle, now sung by John O'Sullivan, as before, excepting the hero, Prinzivalle, sung by Dalmorès. In "Le Chemineau," by Xavier Leroux, composer of "La Reine Fiammette," Mr. Campanini will present his second novelty of the week on Friday, Jan. 31. Yvonne Gall has the leading rôle, supported by Georges Baklanoff, Alfred Maguenat, Gustave Huberdeau, Myrna Sharlow, Maria Claessens, Constantin Nicolay, Octave Dua, and Desire Defree. Louis Hasselmans, from the Paris Opéra Comique, will conduct for the first time here. The libretto of "Le Chemineau" is founded on drama in verse, "The Vagabond," by Jean Richepin, its scenes laid in Burgundy.

METROPOLITAN'S WEEK.

The Metropolitan's eleventh week will open tomorrow with Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Le Coq d'Or," sung and danced by a double cast, Garrison, Braslau, Sundelius, Diaz, Didur, and others on the side, and Galli, Smith, Bolm, Bartels, and Bonfiglio in stage centre, with Monteux conducting. It will be preceded by "Cavalleria," with Muzio, Crimi, and Montesanto, in "Manon Lescaut," on Wednesday evening, are Alda, Perini, Martinelli, De Luca, De Segurola.

"Crispino e la Comare" will occur again on Thursday evening, with Hempel, Braslau, Scotti, Chalmers, and the rest. Following "La Reine Fiammette" on Friday evening there are two operas Saturday, "Elisir d'Amore" at the matinée, with Caruso, Hempel, and Scotti, and "Lucia," for the first time Saturday night, with Garrison, Egener, Martinelli, Bada, De Luca, Rothier, and Papi at the baton.

OPERA AT THE PARK.

For its eighteenth week, which means a fifth month at the Park, the Society of American Singers will add to its latest production two others often sung a mile lower down Broadway.

"Fra Diavolo" will be repeated tomorrow, Wednesday and Friday nights, with Saroya, Duffield, Harrold, John Campbell, Waterous, Peacock, Danforth, and Formes.

"Martha" in English, new on Tuesday, occurs again Thursday night and Saturday afternoon, with Ruth Miller, Elizabeth Campbell, Craig Campbell, Peacock, and Formes.

"Madame Butterfly" on Saturday night, with Harrold and others heard earlier in the season, will be a farewell for Maggie Teyte, who goes to London soon to create a leading rôle in Messager's new opera, "Monsieur Beaucaire."

THE AEOLIAN COMPANY ANNOUNCES TWO DUO-ART ROLLS by PADEREWSKI

His Own Famous "Minuet" and the Chopin "Butterfly" Etude

Being the first to be completed of the series played by the master under his contract to record his interpretations exclusively for the Duo-Art Piano in the future

PADEREWSKI sailed for Europe on the 7th of November. The wonderful work he has done in this country for his beloved Poland during the years of the war has borne its fruit, and he has gone abroad to bring it to completion if he may.

Paderewski has sailed from our shores many times before during his career. Behind him each time he has left priceless recollections in the memories of the thousands who have heard him play.

This time, however, he has left something of infinitely greater value than mere memories. Part of his genius, part of his personality, part of his very musical self, remain to keep alive the inspiring influence of his playing.

Though in person more than three thousand miles away, yet this very day Paderewski is playing the piano at Aeolian Hall.

He is playing two of his favorite encore numbers. And he is playing these beautiful compositions over and over for every music-lover who cares to hear them, and he is playing them as he does when the spirit of his genius and poetical imagination are at their highest flood.

A Letter from ALEXANDER LAMBERT
One of America's Greatest Teachers

New York, January 16, 1919.

The Aeolian Company,
Aeolian Hall, New York.

Gentlemen:

I have had the privilege of listening to Paderewski's two Duo-Art Rolls—his own "Minuet," Opus 14, No. 1, and Chopin's "Etude," Opus 25, No. 9. They are truly fascinating. I have heard Paderewski many times; indeed, I think there are very few who are more familiar with his playing and, I confess, had I been listening from the next room to these rolls, it would have been difficult to realize that Paderewski himself was not seated at the instrument, so perfectly did the Duo-Art reproduce his actual performances.

Yours sincerely,

Alex. Lambert

The making of a Duo-Art Record Roll is a matter of the utmost importance to an artist. Unlike his public performances, they are permanent records of his playing. Not only are they heard by thousands who never hear him in person, but they are the pianist's only possible heritage to posterity.

The great musicians who are making Duo-Art Rolls fully realize this.

On the very day before he sailed, and amid the press of numberless other matters, Paderewski spent three precious hours giving the final touches to the two rolls, though he had already spent many days in perfecting them.

Such is the seriousness with which the Duo-Art Piano is regarded by these musicians. Josef Hofmann, another of the great pianists who are recording their playing for the Duo-Art, says:

"The making of these rolls has required hard and painstaking work, and I have spent many hours on each different composition, but I am quite confident you will agree with me that the results justify all the effort made . . . They are indeed my actual interpretations with all that implies."

While Paderewski, himself, writes:

"I avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate you again on your splendid achievement in the production of the Duo-Art Piano . . . I shall be glad indeed to have my playing reproduced with such manifest fidelity."

EVERY Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoon, at three o'clock, Duo-Art Piano Recitals are given in the beautiful Salon on the Fourth Floor of Aeolian Hall. The Aeolian Company extends a cordial invitation to all music-lovers to attend one of these Recitals and hear the Duo-Art Piano reproduce the playing of Paderewski, Hofmann, Bauer, Ganz, Grainger and the other famous Pianists who are recording their interpretations exclusively for this wonderful instrument. Private demonstrations of the Duo-Art at any time suitable to your convenience.

ON FILM CENSORSHIP

THE black cloud of State censorship of motion pictures is again seen on the horizon—at Albany. It is to be hoped that the fresh wind of clear thinking and artistic sincerity will soon blow it completely away.

Assemblyman William F. Brush of Orange County has introduced a bill into the Legislature that would establish a department of motion pictures, headed by a commissioner whose duties would include the censorship of films and the drawing of a salary of $7,500 a year.

The idea of a department of motion pictures for any of the several purposes mentioned in the bill is not attractive, but the writer does not care to speak positively at this time on any of them except that of censorship.

An official censor, any political appointee of a Governor, empowered to say what the people of the State shall see on the screen and what they shall not see is an obstacle in the way of moral and intellectual progress as well as a czar whose existence is a denial of democracy. Official censorship is bad in theory and worse in practice. The very idea upon which it is based denies the fundamental truth that real growth and development must be free, and experience gives abundant testimony to the fact that censorship is almost invariably characterized by stupidity, ignorance, and bigotry, and sometimes selfish interest.

No unbiased person denies that many photoplays are worse than trash. It is agreed among disinterested people that the influence of many pictures is not good. But this is no reason for an official censor, because of two facts: First, agencies of restraint and education are already at work correcting the existing evils, and, second, an official censor would hamper these agencies and fail to correct the evils. The evils would grow during his régime. Perhaps he would suppress a few scenes not good for young minds, but, unless he was such a censor as the world has never seen, he would permit the exhibition of many more scenes of unhealthful influence and suppress sincere photoplays whose influence would be good. His idea of what to suppress would almost certainly be born of narrow-mindedness. He would be guided by irrational rules and prejudices well-known today for their efficiency in stunting and distorting mental and moral growth and their incompetence in recognizing real values and true processes of development. He would be controlled by political and social bias, regarding as evil anything that did not fit into his ready-made conception of what ought and ought not to be.

But this is discussing probabilities. The certainty is that the evil of official censorship is inherent in censorship itself. The production of wholesome, artistic photoplays is dependent upon the education of the public mind and taste, and education, in this sense, means the power of selection properly exercised. This power comes from practice under such favorable conditions as are provided by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures and many other community and private agencies. How can there be adequate popular practice in selection if an arbitrary censor is to do the selecting for everybody? Any standard maintained by censorship, even if admittedly good, is established on sand and will not endure. The people, relieved from restraint, as they must be from time to time in the ordinary run of events, will turn to license, as they always do under the circumstances, and their last state will be worse than the first. Whatever standard is established by popular education is maintained by its own sure strength in the minds and hearts of those for whom it lives. It is their own creation. And it does not remain at a fixed level. The higher it is the higher it tends to go.

All of this does not approve of license. The question of license should not enter into the discussion, because, in the police and courts, there are at present means for the suppression of any deliberately vicious picture. It is liberty that censorship attacks, not license.

MOVING PICTURE NOTES.

Edward J. Connelly, who took the part of Old Ekdall in support of Mme. Nazimova in Arthur Hopkins's stage production of Ibsen's "The Wild Duck," and who was with the same actress in the photoplay, "Toys of Fate," has been engaged for "The Red Lantern," in which Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger will present Nazimova some time after their release of her screen version of "Ception Shoals," now entitled "Out of the Fog," which is scheduled for next month.

Douglas Fairbanks will make a series of pictures for the Morale Division of the War Department, which is headed by Brig. Gen. Munson and Raymond B. Fosdick. The principles which the picture will seek to emphasize are "Purity of Purpose," "Cheerfulness," "Steadfastness" and "Willingness to Sacrifice." The ideas will be worked out allegorically, it is said.

Mabel Taliaferro is to be the star in "A Bit of Love," the sixth photoplay of the series of twelve to be produced by the Stage Women's War Relief at the Fitzee studios. Rachel Crothers wrote the story, Calder Johnstone prepared the scenario, and George W. Terwilliger will direct the production.

Members of the Town and Country Films, Inc., which produces the James Montgomery Flagg comedies, have gone to Florida to make a series of productions, including "Beresford of the Baboons," "The Last Bottle," and "Pride and Po'k Chops."

An exhibition of painting by John Wenger, art director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, will open at the Memorial Art Gallery in Rochester on Feb. 1. The exhibit will include sketches of Mr. Wenger's Rivoli settings for the last year, some of his work for Strawinsky's ballet "Petroushka" at the Metropolitan, and a few pieces from Greenwich Village Theatre settings.

Motion pictures of marine life in the water around Naples, Italy, will be shown in the auditorium of New York University by Dr. R. L. Ditmars of the New York Zoological Gardens at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Feb. 12, in connection with the celebration of the 111th anniversary of Darwin's birth.

Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's art director, has written the photoplay in which Madge Kennedy will make her next appearance.

ANNUAL AUTO SHOW OPENS HERE FEB. 1

Two Weeks' Exhibit of Passenger Cars, Motor Trucks, and Tractors in Garden and 69th Regiment Armory

New York's nineteenth annual automobile show will open on Saturday night, Feb. 1, in Madison Square Garden and the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, which is close by on Lexington Avenue. It will continue for two weeks, the first week being devoted exclusively to passenger cars and the second week to motor trucks and smaller commercial vehicles. It is interesting to note, as showing the confidence of the manufacturers and the dealers, that the coming exhibit will be the first in the long line of successful motor car shows in this city that has been extended for two weeks and also the first time that a distinct commercial car exhibit has been held here.

The sudden cessation of the war last November altered the entire situation of the automobile industry for the coming year. Production at that time had fallen to a minimum, and had the war continued very few passenger cars would be made this season. The close of the war abrogated the drastic priority orders and production restrictions. The manufacturers, however, who have hitherto given the national shows under the auspices of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, having already abandoned the customary show in January as a war measure, felt that they could not adjust themselves rapidly enough to the new conditions to manage a 1919 show.

The Automobile Dealers' Association of New York City stepped into the breach and saved the year from going without its usual big show. They have met with the heartiest co-operation from the manufacturers, and the announcement that fifty-six different makes of passenger cars will be displayed in the first week, and over fifty makes of trucks in the commercial exhibit indicates that the two weeks' show will be not only a success, but perhaps the largest and most interesting exhibit of its kind ever held in America.

The decorative scheme of each building will be elaborate, and considerable construction work has been necessary. In order to accommodate the exhibitors, it was found necessary to rip up the old flooring and replace it with 40,000 square feet of two-inch oak planks. Owing to the fact that the trucks to be shown in the second week are of such great weight, it was not considered appropriate to use the old planking, which has supported many sporting and big industrial events in days gone by. The balconies likewise will have new floors.

A unique color scheme for the Garden has been worked out. Projecting from the first balcony around the entire arena will be a roof or cornice of Spanish tiles, the cornice being two and a half feet wide and supported by brackets. The tiles will be green and an illuminating scheme will be installed beneath this narrow roof. The Spanish effect will give the first balcony a novel appearance. The walls about the main arena floor will have alternate paneling and large mirrors, which will give the effect of greater area, and the portion beath the balcony will be illuminated with indirect lighting. The color scheme is cream and white, with shades of blue. The first balcony rail or parapet will be paneled in artistic fashion.

A patriotic color scheme will be the keynote of the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory decorations. The rear wall of the building will have a sunburst of red, white and blue forming a huge semi-circle. Between the rows of exhibits will extend a wide arbor effect, with trellised vines and flowers. Cypress trees will form a feature of the decorations. From the balconies garlands and floral baskets will hang. Illuminated glass signs will reveal the name of the exhibitors.

At the main entrance to the armory visitors will pass through an arched arbor and around a fountain. The walls also will be trellised, and under the balcony there will be a pergola ceiling. The semi-circular girders of the roof will be concealed by a canopy of blue bunting.

The armory will contain one of the most interesting passenger car body displays during the first week and commercial body exhibits during the second week. A number of the expensive passenger cars, which formerly were exhibited at the Automobile Salon, in the Hotel Astor, will be in the armory, and there will be some fine examples of custom bodies and rich coach work, as well as the regular stock bodies.

Very little accessory space remains for either week of the show. An interesting feature of the second week will be the large number of tractors and trailers to be exhibited. Some of these are securing space which, as originally planned, was to have been used by accessory exhibitors, and accessories will be displayed in the armory as well as the Garden during the first week of the show only.

The second week all accessories will be in the Garden only, providing more room for tractors and trailers in the armory. A large percentage of the exhibitors of both cars, accessories, and commercial vehicles are new concerns, whose product has heretofore not been exhibited, while the majority of old-time exhibitors and long-established concerns, including many members of the Motor and Accessories Manufacturers' Association, will be present.

During the show there will be a number of luncheons and banquets of various associations and committees, and one of the most noteworthy will be the banquet tendered to Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, the leading American ace, who has twenty-six Hun machines officially to his credit.

Admission will be 50 cents, and one ticket will be good for both buildings. A ticket purchased for the Garden will have a coupon good for admission at the armory and vice versa. Furthermore, it will not be compulsory for the ticket holder to visit both buildings the same day. This arrangement has been made because of the fact that the show will be so large that a visitor would scarcely be able to see all in a single afternoon or evening in either building.

Charles A. Stewart is General Manager of the show.

URGES ROAD CONSTRUCTION

State Highway Commissioner Edwin J. Duffey made some interesting statements regarding the proposed Government and State program of road building in a recent address before the New York State Motor Federation at Rochester. He said it would cost the country $500,000,000 besides its $75,000,000 appropriation now being used. Of this great fund he predicted New York State can reasonably expect to receive $30,000,000.

"I believe that the States should match every dollar received from the Federal Government for good roads with another dollar," said Mr. Duffey, "and this double sum be expended by the States with the national viewpoint of improving the highway system of the country as a whole.

"I do not see how there can be any low prices in highway building in the near future. Materials will keep high for a long time. It will take a million men at daily labor over a period of years to build the national system of highways under our construction program. Where can we find this labor? Where can we find enough engineers and inspectors of integrity and ability to insure our receiving the good roads we want at the lowest possible cost? They are not in existence today.

"Road building is going to proceed throughout America at the most rapid rate possible, but the demand for good roads is going to be far greater than the supplies for building them. We are facing a serious task. Before the war, I had a staff of about 1,200 men," he confided. "Now I have only 400 men. My department will resume its road building activities, suspended during the war, as rapidly as possible."

Commissioner Duffey pleaded that the $150,000,000 or more invested in good roads in this State be not destroyed by the operation of dangerously heavy trucks over them. He urged that the maximum weight of a truck which can be run over present roads without tearing them to pieces be determined and that all heavier trucks be excluded.

"Future highways under the Federal plan will probably stand up under the heaviest of trucks, but these giants should not be allowed to rip our roadways to pieces," he said. "If we allow the destruction of our present highways, we will most certainly face a serious transportation situation."

AUTO ENGINEERS TO MEET.

Lessons Learned from War Automotive Material Will Be Discussed.

The Society of Automotive Engineers, which took an active part in automobile and aviation activities during the war, will hold its annual meeting in this city from Feb. 4 to 6, during the automobile show week. The victory dinner will be held on the evening of Feb. 6 at the Hotel Astor.

The regular meetings will be devoted to various technical discussions, including that on fuel for internal-combustion engines. A half-day session will be devoted to consideration of gasoline, kerosene, benzol, and other fuels. Representatives of the Government will present the latest data as to supplies and the results of recent intensive research, and members returned from the front will relate their experiences regarding war automotive apparatus.

Henry M. Crane will read a paper on the effect of aeronautic practice on automobile design and construction, and there will be a paper on better trucks performance by Major Arthur B. Browne. A. Ludlow Clayden will forecast future development in the production of lighter and more efficient passenger cars. D. McCall White will treat of light-efficiency automobile engines.

The papers to be presented on tractors and tanks will be of peculiar interest in that they will probably be the occasion of making public for the first time a number of engineering features of these new types. Tractor engineering is becoming a very important phase of automotive engineering.

Big Tractor Show in Kansas City.

The fourth annual national tractor show to be held in Kansas City during the week of Feb. 24-March 1 will be the most comprehensive exhibit of tractors, tractor accessories, and power farming machinery ever held in America. The annual shows are given under the direction of the Kansas City Tractor Club, and they have become valuable factors in educating farmers in the economic value of motor farming. A new building, costing $25,000, is being erected for the exhibit.

When He Comes Back

SOMEWHERE in this great land there is a wonderful girl waiting for a wonderful boy.

And not far away a great mother is waiting for her son.

Laughter and joy will attend his coming on that marvelous day in spring. Then life will begin anew and the days will dance along like children happy with the hurdy-gurdy in a quiet, shady street.

He has been far away on a great adventure. He is no longer the boy who sprang astride the chair with paper helmet and a broomstick for a sword to ride down the tin soldiers on the floor.

He passed from boyhood into manhood that dark night on the Marne—faced Death and bade him stand and deliver—and came back to the things he loves.

There will come that first glad meeting at the dock with father and mother happy in their pride—the stir and speed of the journey home—a moment in his room, made ready by his mother's hands—and THEN—that wonderful girl—a motor car—and ho! for the Port of Missing Men.

In a motor car youth will have its fling. The road skims beneath you, winds before you, and unless a man is bloodless he cannot but surrender himself to that fine intoxication that comes of such motion in the open air. It begins in a sort of breathless sensation and ends with that pleasing drowsiness—and silence in which two people need exchange no words to understand.

MOTOR LESSONS TAUGHT BY WAR

Heavy and Continuous Usage of Cars Has Revealed Possibilities of Many Valuable Improvements

Few persons outside of the automobile industry realize the extent of the war's influence upon automobile designs and the changes which have been prompted directly as a result of the preponderant use of gasoline-propelled vehicles as agencies of war and war transportation, says H. Clifford Brokaw, technical director of the West Side Y. M. C. A. automobile school. He calls attention to an interesting occurrence in one of the training camps where several hundred trucks were in use, and which, one after another, developed trouble in the condenser of the ignition system. It was a reliable make, but the condenser had not been designed just right for the particular service. The preponderance of trouble led to tests which showed that the condenser design was faulty, and it was corrected. The manufacturer of the system and the manufacturer of the condenser now know more about condensers than they did before, and similar things have happened in many parts of the engine, chassis, and attachments.

Under this exceptional strain there are many troubles developed which would not show in ordinary use, but nevertheless it has given the manufacturer a very good idea as to the parts which have a small factor of safety. He has better knowledge today of shortcomings of design and of the necessary corrective measures.

"An automobile does not often wear out because of a general giving way of the entire car," says Mr. Brokaw. "Certain parts wear and other parts get out of adjustment, and it is possible to put together a pretty good car out of the reclamations of a junk yard. Out of the war is to come a mechanical adjustment which will make the automobile more reliable, and therefore more serviceable, and will synchronize the wear-out point of its several parts.

"The war has demonstrated that the automobile is more reliable and can be used through a greater range of service than had been dreamed of. At the same time it has shown the desirability of simplicity in design and of accessibility of parts which require attention, which make it possible for the non-mechanic to drive and take care of the car, and keep it moving under all conditions.

"The war also has taken a great many chauffeurs, and owners have found it necessary, as well as patriotic, to release such men by driving and caring for their cars. They, too, have been making discoveries and the manufacturers have had all sorts of suggestions submitted to them out of which valuable lessons have been learned.

"Of course, it is too early for all the experiences of the war to have been worked out and applied. The time between the signing of the armistice and the determination of the New York dealers to have a show in February is too short for much new work. But manufacturers have not been idle in the war years, and because of war urgencies it has become more and more the policy of the factory to make improvements as the need is seen rather than to save up ideas for a coming year's models, and if the brand-new models will be less there will be many interesting new points incorporated in old models.

"Cars used for war work had the severest kind of service under all sorts of conditions for a continuous period. Then, too, great numbers of war automobiles were under one department commander, and where weakness or undue wear developed this man knew all about it and was able to suggest improvements of a constructive value, which would be impossible with a large number of individually owned cars."

HONORS FOR RICKENBACKER

Racehorse Named for Him, and He Will Be Guest at Motor Dinner.

Walter J. Salmon has named the two-year-old thoroughbred racehorse by Manager out of Caution, Eddie Rickenbacker, in honor of America's famous Ace and former motor car racer. The Jockey Club has approved the name.

He holds a Captain's commission. He is expected here during the Automobile Show, and his motor friends are preparing to celebrate his return and his aviation achievements. The Contest Board of the American Automobile Association will give a dinner in his honor.

Motor Truck Board for A. A. A.

The American Automobile Association has added to its list of national boards one which will have to do with motor-truck operation. President David Jameson has appointed Stedman Bent the Chairman of the new board. He is President of the Automobile Club of Philadelphia, and is thoroughly acquainted with motor-truck transportation needs.

NEWS OF THE AUTO TRADE WORLD

Copies of citations for distinguished service by French motor transport units using American-made motor trucks, have recently been received. Accompanying the citations was an award of the Croix de Guerre to the First and Second Groupements, each operating 500 or more White trucks. Later the entire reserve, operating 2,600 Whites, was recognized by a similar citation.

The first convention of the Fulton Motor Truck Company was held a few days ago at its Farmingdale, L. I., factory. Nearly seventy dealers were present from all parts of the country, including Mexico City and Canada. President Melhuish promised the distributers an output daily of thirty trucks prior to the increasing of the plant, and orders for several thousand trucks were placed.

The Owen Magnetic Sales Corporation in this city is celebrating the fifth anniversary of the advent of the car of that name.

Edward G. Kuh, formerly in charge of the used-car department of the Peerless Motor Car Company, has joined the Franklin Company as manager of its used car department.

James J. Hunt, General Manager of the Reo Motor Car Company of this city, has extended an invitation to all Reo dealers to make the local salesrooms their headquarters during the New York show.

Henry L. Hornberger is General Sales Manager of the Globe Rubber Tire Manufacturing Company of Trenton, N. J. The executive offices are in New York City, where he will have his headquarters.

The Packard Motor Car Company has opened an office in New York City for its foreign business, with Fred Cardway, foreign distribution manager, in charge. The company has dealerships in nineteen foreign countries, and in Hawaii, the Philippines, and Porto Rico.

Manufacture of the Transport motor truck has begun at its factory at Mount Pleasant, Mich. The truck is of 2½ tons capacity, internal gear drive, wheelbase 150 inches. Milton A. Holmes is President of the company.

Louis Rosenberg has been appointed director of advertising and sales of the Keystone Tire and Rubber Company.

F. C. Stowers, head of the Kaufmann-Stowers Company, announces that his firm has taken on the distribution of the Warner line of trailers in New York territory. The firm distributes the Nash one and two ton trucks and the Nash quad, also the Titan trucks. The Warner trailer is attracting attention in many parts of the country. A. P. Warner, of speedometer fame, is the inventor and builder.

The Idle Truck Bureau recently established by the Colt-Stratton Company, distributers of Dodge Brothers motor cars and Day-Elder motor trucks, is proving of great advantage to Day-Elder truck owners who do a general express or forwarding business. Many large jobs, as well as small ones, have been handled, even to one request from an individual who had a piano coming from Washington by freight.

Two Weeks Auto Show in Brooklyn.

Plans are progressing favorably for the annual Brooklyn automobile show in the Twenty-third Regiment Armory, on Bedford Avenue, from March 29 to April 12, the first week being the passenger car exhibit and the second week devoted to commercial cars.

ILLINOIS ROAD WORK.

Nearly $8,000,000 Available for Spring Highway Improvement.

Illinois is alive to the necessity of good roads, as recently indicated by Chief Highway Engineer Older, who announced that approximately $8,000,000, in addition to the $60,000,000 to be raised by the bond issue passed in November, is available in the State Treasury for road work in Illinois next Spring.

He says the Lincoln Highway, the Chicago to Springfield section of the Dixie Highway, and the Chicago-Wisconsin Highway are the roads designated for first improvement. Nearly $6,000,000 is available for work on these three roads. Just how soon the work will be started will depend upon the ability of the department to secure material and the contractors.

About $2,000,000 is available for State aid work in the different counties of the State. The General Assembly will be asked to appropriate $2,000,000 more to complete the season's program, and to meet the Federal aid available on July 1, 1920.

ITALIAN AUTO INDUSTRY.

Liability Companies and Exports Increased During War Period.

The Italian automobile industry during the war gave proof of extraordinary development, extending its proper sphere of action also to the fields of aviation, says The Board of Trade Journal, in quoting Il Tempo of Rome. The number of limited liability companies engaged in the industry increased from thirty-two on Dec. 31, 1913, to fifty-five at the end of 1917.

As regards foreign trade, the import of automobiles declined from a value of 13,531,372 lire in 1913 to 7,729,900 lire in 1917, (up to Dec. 13,) a falling off of 5,801,472 lire. Exports, however, increased from 34,180,937 lire to 115,693,806 lire.

Newark's Annual Auto Show.

The Newark, N. J., automobile show will be held as usual this season, from Feb. 15 to 22, in the First Regiment Armory. Claude E. Holgate, Secretary of the New Jersey Automobile Trade Association, is manager of the show.

For a Quicker Start

When you start your car, don't try to do it all with the starter button, for that only wastes current. Prime your cylinders and then:

1. Set your controls right, with retarded spark and throttle slightly open.
2. Use your choker to get a richer mixture and quicker explosion.
3. Throw out the clutch and take some of the load off the engine.
4. Then—and not till then—step on the button, and away she'll go.

There are lots of other little wrinkles that prolong your battery's life and make car operation easier. Drop in and let us post you on them.

CHANDLER SIX

Leads All Sixes
Now As Always

CHANDLER is back now to the prices at which thousands bought this great car because it offered such exceptional value.

At $1795 Chandler leads all other high-grade sixes, all other cars of every type, just as distinctly as it has always led them.

A really fine car closely priced. That is Chandler policy. And that policy holds good for 1919 just as it has held good for five years past.

Fifty thousand owners know what a good car the Chandler is. They know, better than we can tell, the marvels of its motor—its smooth-flowing, quiet power; its instant flexibility; its endurance. They know the sturdy strength of the whole Chandler chassis.

now only $2395

The whole motor car market offers no more beautiful coupe than this four-passenger convertible Chandler, and no other on a really fine chassis at such a moderate price.

Most graceful in the lines of its design, handsomely finished, richly cushioned and upholstered, the Chandler Coupe appeals keenly to persons of discriminating tastes. Enclosed, it offers snug protection against the cold or rain or snow. On pleasant days, with the windows lowered away, it is open to the sunshine and soft air.

For those wishing larger seating capacity the Chandler seven-passenger four door Sedan provides the same quality as the coupe.

More than strong enough to stand up under the work it will be called upon to do.

This describes every part and feature of the Clydesdale Truck. When you examine it you will see for yourself that nothing has been overlooked—every detail is in keeping. That mighty worm drive axle, that 7 to 8 inch frame—those extra wide springs, with their heavy bushed shackles—gusset plates that look as though they were designed for bridgework. So you can go on throughout the entire truck, and you will find each part has strength, and to spare.

This means lack of trouble for you—low upkeep and steady service.

Is it any wonder that Clydesdale Trucks have built up such a splendid reputation for strength and durability, and that analytical truck buyers are increasing their equipment with Clydesdales?

There is a capacity for your haulage requirements. Let us show you just what Clydesdale will mean to you in your business.

The Franklin CAR

The Many Claims of Light Weight Call for the Scales—also Questions

LIGHT WEIGHT in an automobile is a correct basic principle, else there wouldn't be such a noticeable change of front in the industry—so many claims, where only one existed before.

But the next time this statement of light weight comes up, get on the scales with it, and see how far the claim goes. Is it an actuality or just words? If it makes good, then ask, How did you get it?

That's important, because light weight must not sacrifice strength and safety.

It began 16 years ago with the principle of Direct Air Cooling, one of the principles which permitted logical light weight, sturdiness, resiliency, and economy, instead of the prevalent heavy weight, rigidity and expense.

This difference has appealed so strongly to the American people, especially during the last three years, that heavy weight, massiveness and rigidity have changed to statements of light weight, trimness and flexibility. The statements are in the right direction, but get on the scales with the weight and on a rough road with the flexibility—and see if the practice bears out the statements.

Then try the Franklin in the same way.

From Statement to Performance

Franklin Light Weight and Flexibility carry through from statement to performance, and the results are worth knowing about.

1. ECONOMY. Franklin economy is the logical result of its light weight and flexibility, and it consists of two parts—economy of operation and economy of depreciation. In gasoline and tires, the Franklin gives a daily delivery of—

20 miles to the gallon of gasoline—instead of 10
10,000 miles to the set of tires—instead of 5,000

And in economy of depreciation, the Franklin, owing to the fact that it does not pound itself to pieces over rough roads, depreciates 50% slower than the average car.

2. SAFETY. A car that is too heavy is an unsafe proposition on rough or slippery roads. And a car that has dropped off weight unscientifically, may have sacrificed safety in so doing. The Franklin's light weight and flexibility enable it to follow the bumps of a road with safety, and Franklin construction and materials mean strength.

3. COMFORT. You cannot realize Franklin comfort unless you ride in the car over a road that would mean hardship in another and heavier car. Franklin light weight and flexibility give a remarkable degree of riding-comfort over all the roads.

4. FLEXIBILITY. Here is the great aid to Franklin Light Weight. Franklin Flexibility, as opposed to rigidity, comes from the use of full-elliptic springs, instead of the compromise type, and chassis frame of tough, resilient ash, instead of the usual unyielding steel. No torque bars or strut rods and braces.

5. SIMPLICITY. Fewer parts mean less trouble as well as less weight. Direct Air Cooling cuts out the 177 parts incident to water-cooling and with them go the frequent annoyance, bother and repairs common to radiators, pipes, water-jackets, etc. Nothing to boil or to freeze.

These are the points about Franklin Light Weight that indicate the carefulness with which it is arrived at. Note what they mean in each item of performance of the car.

Remember these points when next you hear claims of light weight. For they are important to you, as distinguishing between mere claims and actual scientific facts of construction.

WHAT ARMY OWES TO RED CROSS HELP

Surgeon General Acknowledges Debt of His Department to Organization's Preparedness in France

"Without the help of the American Red Cross the Army Medical Department could not have done its work."—Surgeon General Ireland.

THAT the preparedness of the American Red Cross enabled the United States Army to take proper care of its wounded, particularly in the emergency period when American troops were hurriedly shifted into the Marne sector to stem the German advance last Summer, is shown in an article written by Surgeon General Merrille W. Ireland for the current issue of the Red Cross Magazine.

The Surgeon General, who was Chief Surgeon of the American Expeditionary Forces in France before he came home as Major Gen. W. C. Gorgas's successor, is famous among his army associates for his straightforward methods and his habit of giving credit where it is due. They call him "Pronto," meaning "Prompt," on account of his ability to get things done quickly. He got the nickname in the Philippines, and it stuck to him in France.

This is what he says in his article, entitled "The Red Cross and the American Army":

"The greatest word in the vocabulary of the profesional medical officer is sanitation. Sanitation means cleanliness. And if order is heaven's first wish for the world, cleanliness must certainly be its second.

"That the world may be clean! That is the way I view the great task of the Red Cross workers of the world. Clean physically, clean mentally, clean morally—I can think of no more inspiring or practical gospel for humanity than that. And the Red Cros is its evangelist.

"If such a service is needed by the world in general, how much more is it needed by an army in action! It is a commonplace that our greatest enemy in this war was not the Germans, but dirt. Never before have soldiers had to fight so much exposed to dirt and filth. And yet never has a great war been won with so little suffering and death caused directly by this enveloping contagion. For this achievement — and there has been no greater in the late war in Europe—we have to thank most of all the American Red Cross.

AN EFFICIENT ORGANIZATION.

"The story of the cleaning influence of the Red Cross workers in France is too long for me to attempt to tell with any completeness. It has been an enterprise as vast as the war itself. From the beginning it has done those things which the Army Medical Corps wanted done but could not do itself. Without the help of the American Red Cross the Army Medical Department could not have done its work.

"The work of the Red Cross was often the theme of discussions at American General Headquarters at Chaumont. I remember that it was enlarged upon there in a conversation among General Pershing, Mr. H. P. Davison, the Chairman of the War Council of the American Red Cross, and myself. We were speaking of the value of the service rendered by the millions of our women and how they helped keep the influence of home about the boys at the front. And General Pershing said: 'The women of the United States deserve a large share of the credit for the successes of the American forces.'

"Our army officers have often admired not only the spirit but the efficiency of the American Red Cross organization. It provided an inexhaustible store of supplies; it possessed a remarkable facility for adapting itself to any emergency, however unexpected; and its personnel always evinced the finest readiness for co-operation. The millions of surgical dressings, knitted articles, refugee garments, and other supplies it contributed—for these things alone it would have deserved the army's unstinted praise. All the splints used in all our hospitals in France, both of the army and of the Red Cross, came from the Red Cross. It furnished more than a quarter of a billion surgical dressings. It sent over enough sweaters for every man in our overseas forces to possess one.

"I remember once, as I started to motor back to General Headquarters, I told my colored driver that I had a Red Cross sweater for him. He replied: 'Thanks, boss, but I've just distributed eleven of them to the boys over in the garage.'

"The work of the Red Cross as an organization began beyond the army's evacuating hospitals and continued through base hospitals, convalescent homes, recreation rooms, railway food depots, on board the steamers, and on back to our own shores, and is continuing until the men reach home. This has been the work, involving as it did thousands of devoted workers and minute attention to humberless trifles, which the army organizations alone could never have performed.

"Many a time I have seen our men being fed on the often slow and tedious railway journeys in France; seen those who were taken sick en route being cared for; seen them being amused by movies, lectures, libraries at rest centres; seen letters being written by Red Cross 'searchers' for those who were too sick to write themselves, or witnessed the motherly oversight given the young women nurses when they came to the cities on their brief vacations. Do you know what an army medical officer thinks when he sees things like these? Just this: Such comforts bring the home influence to the battlefield; the home influence means morale, and morale means—victory!

"The larger and more spectacular ways in which the Red Cross has helped the fighting forces are, I dare say, pretty well understood by the readers of the Red Cross Magazine. It directed its army of workers in France from two headquarters: the field headquarters at Chaumont, under command of Major Hugh Scott, and the civilian headquarters in Paris, this latter being at first situated at 4 Place do la Concorde, but later and at present in what was the Regina Hotel.

"Major Scott's offices at Chaumont adjoined mine, our rooms being separated only by a door. With Major Scott and Chief Red Cross Surgeon Colonel Alexander Lambert, and later Chief Surgeon Colonel Fred Murphy, I maintained the closest and most friendly cooperation possible. The army medical and sanitation work and that of the Red Cross are two services requiring no liaison officials. We worked together like one unit. This was made possible because of the loyal and infatigable interest these Red Cross officers and their associates took in the execution of the army plans.

"Probably the greatest single service rendered by the Red Cross home forces was the supply of trained nurses it furnished our hospitals. The Army Medical Corps trains a few nurses, but could never hope to turn out the large number provided through Miss Delano's department. If we needed a thousand nurses for a given work, we telegraphed the War Department. The War Department notified Miss Delano. And the nurses arrived on schedule.

"An especially notable service rendered by Red Cross nurses occurred during the early American campaigns when our men were brigaded with French divisions. When wounded they were, of course, taken to French hospitals. Unable to answer questions or tell their needs, they were in a very unhappy plight. Scores of Red Cross nurses speaking both French and English were immediately sent to these hospitals—and the problem was solved. In this war, where several armies were operating together, the only common hospital service is that of the Red Cross.

"Another much-appreciated assistance came from the fact that the Red Cross could establish itself in places forbidden the Army Medical Departments. Within the district of Paris, for instance, we could not establish army hospitals. The Red Cross, however, in that district is now operating units 1, 2, and 3 as well as a tent hospital, which had at first 500 beds, but when I came away had 2,200!

"The Red Cross could also establish store depots in places the army could not enter for strategic reasons. Suppose Headquarters planned an attack in a given region. Hospital stores must be got to that region. If the army were observed by the enemy to be transporting stores thither, you can see that it wouldn't take much guessing on the part of enemy observers to tell where that drive was going to be. But the Red Cross was everywhere, always preparing for any possible contingency. For it to be busily in evidence in the most unlikely places was no novelty. Thus as the Red Cross workers were kept posted as to our plans of attack, they were able to place hospital supplies where they would be most handy without arousing the Hun's auspicions.

BRAVE AND RESOURCEFUL.

"This resourcefulness and willingness to undertake any work, no matter how novel or arduous, was exhibited in a brilliant manner during last Summer's historic engagements in the Château-Thierry sector. It was there that the American Red Cross hospital service received its first baptism of fire in a general engagement in which our troops took part. It there first entered the 'hospital fighting front.' If full credit is to be given all American factors in this battle, which saved Paris for the second time and broke the back of the German military power, the action of the Red Cross must be described in some detail.

"The Red Cross went to France with three major purposes: To restore devastated districts, to aid those of the French people who were stricken by the war, and to augment the sanitary service of the American Expeditionary Forces. The last named service was controlled directly by the officers of the army and was as much subject to General Pershing's orders as the Army Medical Department itself. By the regulations of the Army Medical Department, the 'Red Cross personnel, except in cases of great emergency, will not be assigned to duty at the front, but will be employed in hospitals in the service of the interior, at the base, in hospital ships, and along the line of communications.'

"At Château-Thierry came the 'great emergency.' The Germans, springing their last surprise offensive, early in June began a drive toward Paris from the Chemin des Dames. So rapid was their initial advance that the French Medical Department lost more than 10,000 beds and considerable stores. The need in that sector for evacuating hospitals, that is, mobile operating units, developed immediately.

"The Red Cross rose promptly to the occasion. The splendid base hospital at Juilly, not far from Château-Thierry, which had been for some time most capably managed by Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, was taken over by the Red Cross and made into a large, non-mobile evacuating hospital.

"By the time the French-American counterattack had begun in the middle of July, two Red Cross mobile units were established at the front. One, No. 114, in charge of Major McCoy, who came to France with base hospital No. 1, the Bellevue unit, was established at Jouy-sur-Morin, south of Château-Thierry. It moved up into Château-Thierry, as the tide of battle started north, and occupied a schoolhouse in the city.

"About the same time another Red Cross evacuating hospital, No. 110, under charge of Major Moorhead, whose wife is Superintendent in charge of the Red Cross work of making surgical dressings, moved north and set up a tent at Coincy, just above Château-Thierry.

"The record made by these two hospital units during the counterattack should always be accounted a bright page in the annals of the American Red Cross. They, with army units, served at the fighting front.

"As the counterattack developed there streamed back upon these evacuating hospitals a tide of American wounded that kept the workers busy day and night. Each unit had about eight or ten operating teams, each team being composed of a surgeon, assistant surgeon, anaesthetist, and nurse. They worked in shifts. One shift operated from 8 in the morning until 7 in the evening; then, after an hour for cleaning up, the other began at 8 and worked until 7 in the morning. The full tragedy of the casualties from gas, shells, and machine-gun bullets will not be understood until the workers and soldiers return, each to tell his tale.

"From this time on, Major McCoy's and Major Moorhead's units were regularly numbered among the evacuating hospitals of the Army Medical Corps and were operated as such. The facility with which they were fused into the army organization is itself an indication of the fine harmony existing among army and Red Cross leaders. Both these Red Cross units were thereafter moved swiftly into those places where the fighting was thickest. They served at the drive across the St. Mihiel salient and later with the advance made from Toul to the west of the Meuse River.

"In the St. Mihiel fighting all the evacuating hospitals experienced a pleasant surprise. The American Headquarters expected a bitter struggle and our hospitals were prepared to handle wounded on an unprecedented scale. It turned out, however, that we had overestimated the morale of the enemy and underestimated the valor of our troops. The salient was taken with comparative ease, and, as you recall, in record time. The number of wounded was very small, indeed. On Oct. 6 I remained all night with Major McCoy's unit operating at Fleury. I have only praise for the loyalty and effectiveness of his staff.

"As to the future work of the Red Cross in France: It will not be ended until the work of our army is ended, and perhaps not even then. Although the fighting is over, the Red Cross will be performing a much needed service all this Winter. It will care for the large number of our wounded still in convalescent hospitals and homes in France. Hospitals and homes overseas are not what they are in this country. They are not heated to the degree of warmth to which Americans are accustomed, and there are fewer facilities. Without the Red Cross nurses the places where our sick and wounded boys are sheltered would be mighty cheerless.

"Although there is to be no further expansion of the Red Cross work in France, its work will go on. It will bring comfort to our boys not only as they lie sick in hospitals and as they keep guard on German soil, but to the thousands of repatriated French people who are returning to pick out from the bleak devastation of war the ruins of what were once their ancestral homes. Without the Red Cross army of mercy to follow in the tragic furrows made by the engines of war, the aftermath of suffering in France this Winter would be a greater desolation than we can conceive.

"Fighting with mortal weapons may cease, but the campaign of mercy of the Red Cross will never cease as long as the need of cleansing and healing is present among the races of the earth."

"Modern Methods of Motor Transportation"

A Text Book Dealing With Motor Transport Problems

Between the covers of this practical book will be found a resume of the MOTOR TRANSPORTATION CONFERENCE held in the Colt-Stratton Auditorium, Nov. 16-23, 1918. Twenty-two of the most prominent transportation experts express their views and offer solutions to the principal problems which beset owners of commercial cars. This book contains many valuable suggestions for increasing the efficiency and economy of loading and routing, as well as inter-city and intra-city haulage, etc. It is of utmost value to intending purchasers of trucks. A copy will be mailed on receipt of ten cents postage, or will be presented without charge at 1847 Broadway.

Would You Wait Three Months for a Super-Six?

An Early Shortage Seems Certain

Thousands have waited months for Hudsons. Others will have to if they want an open model and do not make their choice now.

Normal factory production cannot be resumed much before June. Present production is being concentrated on closed cars, for which there is an immediate demand.

Not the least of Super-Six advantages is its price $2200 for the seven-passenger phaeton.

No open car models will be turned out for several months. The dealers—or some dealers to be exact, for all are not in the position—have a few open car models. They are all they have to meet the early spring requirements.

When they are gone you must wait until the factory can get back to normal open car production schedule.

Such is the recognition the motor-buying public has given the Super-Six.

What car has received a finer endorsement for endurance and value? It holds all worth-while records for stock cars in speed, acceleration, hill climbing, and reliability.

You can get a seven-passenger phaeton model for $2,200 now. Premiums have been paid for prompt delivery of Super-Sixes.

Think of the demand there will be for the few open models now in stock throughout the country when the Spring buying season opens and people realize it will be June before full normal production can be resumed.

Our stock can not last more than a few days then.

MERCHANT MARINE OF 15,000,000 TONS

Director General Piez of Emergency Fleet Corporation Describes Vast Governmental Organization

By CHARLES PIEZ,
Director General U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

AN American merchant marine of 15,000,000 deadweight tons!

Just this will accrue to our country from the activities of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the members of the organization, who have spent many months under the high pressure of national needs, look to that result for their compensation for the long months of ceaseless and tireless effort—an effort which in the early stages of our participation in the great war was shrouded with gloom because of Germany's ruthless submarine campaign.

The Emergency Fleet Corporation is charged with responsibilities which involve expenditures of $3,650,000,000 and the construction of a fleet of vessels which, with certain emergency exceptions, will be so varied and well balanced as to meet the requirements of our commerce with our own territories and possessions and with foreign countries.

Beyond a doubt this great fleet of merchant ships will compose one of the broadest benefits which will accrue to the American people from the war.

Particularly while we were in the face of war there was much confusion in the public mind as to the purposes and workings of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and its departments; and now that peace has come and the great emergency has become a thing of history, it seems fitting that the American people should know the story —

The United States Shipping Board was created by act of Congress, approved Sept. 9, 1916, "for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its territories and possessions and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water engaged in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes."

The Shipping Board, under the provisions of this act, had the power, if in its judgment such action was necessary to carry out the purposes of the act, to form under the laws of the District of Columbia, one or more corporations for the purchase, construction, equipment, lease, charter, maintenance and operation of merchant vessels in the commerce of the United States, and in the exercise of the power so granted the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation was organized on April 16, 1917, with a capital stock of $50,000,000, all of which has been subscribed for by the United States Shipping Board on behalf of the United States.

As the Shipping Board is, under the act, charged with the responsibility of doing all things necessary to protect the interest of the United States in the Emergency Fleet Corporation, it has elected to place the control of the corporation in the hands of a board of seven trustees, five of whom are the five Commissioners composing the United States Shipping Board.

CENTRALIZED CONTROL.

The control of the Fleet Corporation by the Shipping Board is made still more effective by the fact that the chairman of the board is at the same time President of the corporation. This is not only the case with Edward N. Hurley, the present Chairman of the Shipping Board, but was also the case with the former incumbent, William Denman. It is evident that by this method of control the vast responsibilities which the war has created in regulating water-borne traffic, in constructing under high pressure a merchant marine of more than 15,000,000 deadweight tons and in operating not only these ships as they were constructed, but also the German tonnage which was commandeered, and the large domestic and foreign tonnage which was chartered, rest in the final analysis upon the five Commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, but the construction of a fleet and the profitable employment of that fleet were two such widely differing functions and required such utterly unrelated experiences that they could best be accomplished by two separate corporations and two separate boards of Directors. Proper control and coordination through the Shipping Board was still possible through stock control, and its consequent power to elect directors who conducted the affairs of the two corporations in accord with the general policy laid down by the Shipping Board.

When Mr. Hurley took office the by-laws of the Fleet Corporation provided that the officers were to be a President, a Vice President, a Treasurer, a Secretary, a General Manager, and such other officers as the Trustees might determine. The definition of duties was as follows: The President was to preside at all meetings of the stockholders and of the Trustees, and with the Secretary to sign all contracts and papers on behalf of the corporation. The General Manager was to be ex-officio Chairman of the Executive Committee, to have the general oversight and management of the affairs of the corporation and power to employ and discharge all clerks, employes, and agents, determine their salaries, and prescribe and define their duties.

In other words, the titular head of the corporation received merely nominal powers, and the General Manager, usually an appointed officer, received full executive control and responsibility, but lacked the power to complete contracts, a necessary function for speedy prosecution of the work.

The Denman-Goethals controversy arose out of this faulty scheme of organization. Mr. Hurley improved the condition when, late in November, the by-laws were amended so that complete power was concentrated in the President of the corporation with the authority to delegate it, and the General Managership was made an appointive instead of an elective office. But, in spite of this necessary step the process of decentralization above outlined would have improved the administration of both the constructing and the operating divisions and would have relieved mightily the pressure on a much overloaded board.

In the popular mind the Construction Division is considered the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and as it is to the organization of this division that this article will address itself, I will follow the popular misconception and refer to this division as the Fleet Corporation.

GROWTH OF CORPORATION.

The corporation began in reality as a designing and contracting organization, and for the first four months of its existence these two functions overshadowed all others. On Aug. 3, 1917, however, all vessels in American yards under construction or contract for either domestic or foreign account were requisitioned, and this step brought the control of the construction of 413 vessels, necessitating the addition of a Division of Construction to the skeleton organization then existing. The requisitioning of these vessels, involving as it did the setting aside of the rights of owners, brought also a crop of intricate legal questions, which brought the then embryonic legal division into prominence.

But the country's needs for ships could not be satisfied with the output of the shipyards then existing, and substantially every one of the earlier contracts for vessel construction carried with it the obligation of constructing wholly new facilities. In most cases the contractor furnished only a portion of the cost of the shipyard, but was supplied with the necessary additional working capital through advance payments made under contract provisions. Designing vessels and contracting for their construction, which constituted the first place of the corporation's work, was quite naturally followed by plant and shipyard construction as the second phase. In the meantime, however, the demand for war supplies was making heavy inroads not only on the available stocks, but on the producing capacity of the industries as well, and the Emergency Fleet Corporation found itself compelled to assume increasing responsibility for furnishing all of the new yards, and many of the old ones, with the necessary raw and finished materials.

In the construction of wood steamers, only a few yards, for instance, accepted contracts for the delivery of complete ships, the remaining yards undertook the construction of wood hulls only, for which the Fleet Corporation had to provide not only the lumber and fastenings, but the chains, anchors, and other hull accessories as well. The corporation had to furnish in addition the boilers, piping, engines, propelling machinery, deck machinery, and all other parts of the equipment, and had to construct separate plants at which this machinery and equipment could be installed on the hulls delivered by the hull contractors. The construction of the wood steamers, particularly in the absence of definite experience and precedent, presented so many complications that it called for the separation of the construction division into two divisions—one controlling steel ship and the other wood ship construction.

As the construction program developed, it became evident that the two main problems confronting the corporation consisted in procuring an adequate supply of labor and an adequate supply of material delivered in proper sequence. On Aug. 1, 1917, the number of men engaged in the shipyards was in the neighborhood of 50,000, and that number under the drive of our great necessity was increased sevenfold in almost as many months. The men were brought to the shipyards by patriotic appeals, by the lure of high wages, and by the probability of exemption from the draft. They came from all walks of life, and were lacking not only in experience even in kindred or allied trades, but were too soft physically to endure the hardships which work in the yards imposed. But they had enthusiasm and needed but training in the rudiments of the crafts to convert them, under proper supervision and leadership, into real producers.

The problems of building up this huge army of workers were numerous, and justified the creation of the Industrial Relations Division, with its various sections. The labor problem was further complicated by the fact that in the scramble for the very limited supply of labor, employers in all the war industries indulged in unregulated and unwholesome increases of wages. Promises of heavy overtime, grants of extra bonuses under various guises, deliberate deception in grading men under a higher classification, were all employed as a means of evading the liberal wage scale fixed by the Wage Adjustment Board in the effort to attract men from other yards.

REGULATION OF WAGES.

The Division of Industrial Relations became charged, therefore, not only with responsibility connected with the labor supply, its proper maintenance in health and safety, and the adjustment of minor differences and delinquencies, but it had to accept the burden of occupational draft deferments, the training and stimulation of workers, the proper allocation of the available labor supply, including the elimination of "scamping," and last, but by all odds the most difficult, the control of a proper adherence to the day rates, piece rates, and classification of occupations established by the Shipbuilding Labor Adjustment Board.

But the establishment of a stable and effective labor force at each of the yards involved another problem of considerable magnitude. Unfortunately, the shipyards clustered about the fringes of the highly congested industrial centres of the seaboard and on the Great Lakes, and almost everywhere there were lacking adequate transportation facilities, adequate housing facilities, or both. Ninety-five million dollars was appropriated by Congress to relieve these conditions in the shipyards alone, and the Division of Passenger Transportation and Housing had to be developed in record time to assume charge of this highly important piece of emergency construction.

The necessity of building up rapidly a huge army of shipbuilders out of a labor reservoir made up in no small part of unassimilated aliens involved another task, that of creating a proper esprit de corps, of inculcating a realization of the national peril and the individual's duty in the face of that peril, of arousing the latent patriotism of the workmen and the shipyard communities and building thereon a proper conception of the responsibilities of American citizenship. This task was effectually accomplished by the speaking campaigns organized by the National Service Section of the Fleet Corporation, by posters issued by the Publications Section and by a campaign of newspaper publicity, and the shipbuilding program for a period of eighteen months was marked by but two or three local and ephemeral strikes.

Procuring an adequate supply of material in proper sequence presented in essence just as many and as serious a set of difficulties as did the supply of labor. Beginning with the simple act of purchasing, the failure to make deliveries called for the organization of a production and expediting department and the necessity of bringing the finished material to the completed hull presented a difficult task in allocation, dispatching, and transportation. It must be borne in mind that the Fleet Corporation accepted substantially full responsibility for supplying the raw materials, the finished materials, and the machine for a wood ship program amounting to $450,000,000, and that, in addition, it was charged with the burden of getting all the steel and a large part of the machinery for a steel ship program at least six times that size.

Purchasing was but a minor part of a problem which involved responsibility for delay in supplying material of every character to every one of the 171 yards under contract with the corporation. And when it is remembered that on the one hand the greater number of these yards lacked the experience and capacity to predetermine their needs, and particularly the sequence in which the material had to be supplied, and that, on the other hand, many of the plants and agencies supplying machinery and material had to increase largely their facilities to meet the shipyard needs, some idea of the magnitude of the problem confronting the corporation can be gained.

SUPPLY DIVISION'S WORK.

It was considered that to concentrate in the hands of a single division the responsibility for buying, and delivering to the yards on time and in proper sequence, all the material the corporation was charged with furnishing, and the functions of purchasing, of tracing and expediting, of allocating and dispatching, of inspecting and of transporting, which in the earlier days of our development were performed by three different departments, were thereupon consolidated under the control of the Supply Division. This division built up effective district organizations in the various industrial centres of the country and maintained its contact with the shipyards through representatives in the offices of the District Managers in the shipbuilding districts.

The concentration of the responsibility for buying and delivering in proper time under one head resulted in better and more intelligent purchasing, and in a much improved estimate of the extensions to manufacturing facilities which the intensified shipbuilding needs demanded.

There were then in reality two great supply divisions, one undertaking to provide the necessary labor and the other the necessary material, and these two divisions served the four divisions that were charged with the supervision of construction: The Division of Housing and Transportation, the Division of Shipyard Plants, the Division of Steel Ship Construction, and the Division of Wood Ship Construction. Each of these divisions developed its own technical department, excepting that in the case of the two ship constructing divisions a single technical department covering both naval architecture and marine engineering, for both steel and wood ships, was placed under the administration of the Division of Steel Ship Construction.

For the purpose of controlling the actual construction in the field, the country was originally divided into eleven districts in each of which there was one or more representatives of each of the construction and service divisions and sections. The original district management contemplated direct lines of both communication and authority between the division and section representatives and their chiefs at the central office without powers of co-ordination, review or revocation of all the district activities in the hands of any one district officer.

This scheme demonstrated its weakness as the functions of the corporation, and therefore the representatives in the districts multiplied, and the control of all of the functions in each district was thereupon placed in the hands of a district manager who, as the direct representative of the Vice President and General Manager, exercised in respect to the districts, all of the authority which the latter exercised over the operations of the corporation as a whole. The number of the districts was reduced from eleven to eight and the organizations in each district became in substance a cross section of the organization of the home office.

This step to decentralization aided materially in the expedition and dispatch of affairs particularly as the lines of direct communication between the subheads of the district and the corresponding division heads at the home office were preserved. To attain this highly desirable end, the managers of the divisions and the heads of the various sections in the home office having field or district representatives were asked by the district managers to appoint their representatives. If they proved unsatisfactory to the district manager he asked for their removal and the appointment of substitutes, but the district manager had final voice, subject to the limitation of the general rule covering this matter, to determine the salaries of these representatives.

The various divisions and sections at the Home Office communicate directly with their appointed representatives, but send carbon copies of all directions and instructions to the District Manager, who has the power to veto any instructions and stop any processes which, in his judgment, and from his local viewpoint and his first-hand contact with the problems affected are inimical to the interests of the Fleet Corporation. Failing to convince the division or section at the Home Office of the soundness of his decision, appeal lies to the Vice President and General Manager.

CO-ORDINATION EFFECTED.

Similar decentralization and co-ordination of all the war making and war serving departments of the Government could have been affected if the same geographical districts had been adopted for all these departments, and if a representative of the President had been appointed in each district as the co-ordinating officer of the district heads of these departments, with the power to review and veto on any question affecting two or more departments. The pyramiding of wages, the placing of contracts beyond the producing capacity of the district, the duplication of facilities could largely have been, in this wise, avoided; for most of these difficulties arose out of the wholly unregulated activities of the several large governmental departments.

The control exercised in these respects by the War Industries Board, beneficial and helpful as it was, did not extend far enough, nor was that board created early enough to prevent some of the more flagrant of the difficulties which impeded the industrial processes serving the war. Had the war continued another year the necessities would inevitably have led to an organization controlling and co-ordinating all district activities of the several Government agencies and departments, thereby making them immediately responsive to such a national directing agency of industrial processes and needs as the War Industries Board finally became. There would have developed out of such an organization a national labor policy consistent in its aims with the industrial needs of the country and avoiding the needless and expensive competition for the limited labor supply by contractors having cost plus or remunerative lump sum contracts. There would have been provided opportunities of disciplining recalcitrant contractors who offended both the canons of decency and the implied obligations of contract.

Every division of the Fleet Corporation presented problems exceeding in number and magnitude the problems presented by an industrial or commercial enterprise doing a business of many millions a year, and every division required an organization of which the organization of the corporation was but the pattern. The real difficulty lay not in choosing the general form of the organization but in finding men who had not only the necessary experience and capacity for the job but the proper temperament to blend quickly and harmoniously with the rest for the smooth and effective accomplishment of the task. Since the selection of the men presented the chief difficulty we had no hesitancy in building our organization around the mental capacities and the temperamental peculiarities of the men we had available. The organization of the Fleet Corporation has been in a state of flux from the first and intentionally so, because it gave an opportunity for those quick changes and rearrangements which emergency conditions constantly demand. Today, with the pressure over, some of the functions will disappear, others will be consolidated, and a new management, adjusted to normal conditions, will result.

The organization through the last six months of its career has been subjected to the constant critical study of an Organization and Methods Section, attached to the staff of the Vice President in charge of administration, and this section has suggested administrative changes, has assisted in the definition of duties and responsibilities of the operating units, and has pointed out duplications of work and inconsistencies and overlaps in jurisdiction. It has made a study of the duties and responsibilities of different positions, and has developed a plan for bringing about uniformity in classification and salaries of employes, which is now in operation.

Instructions given by the general officers of the corporation are issued in the form or orders, which may be either general, special or technical; and these for the purpose of securing consistency and harmony with orders of a similar character previously issued are cleared through the Organization and Methods Section. The necessity of such a constant critical study of an organization which extraordinary pressure is expanding with great speed is apparent, and its value in reducing such a hastily gathered organization to a well balanced effective unit is open to no doubt.

Coming now to a more detailed description of the organization as it existed before the signing of the armistice, complete power was delegated by the Board of Trustees to the Director General, who retained control of the policy of the corporation, but placed control of the management in the hands of the Vice President and General Manager. As an immediate relief to this official the general duties and activities were divided into two main groups, one covering ship production, administered by the Vice President and General Manager with a Vice President and Assistant General Manager in more immediate charge, and the other covering administration with a Vice President in charge. The position of the Industrial Relations Division under the administration group of activities due to a desire more nearly to balance the work of the two groups. The Industrial Relations Division serves the Production Divisions, but the relationship between the Vice Presidents is so close and harmonious that the rather undefined position of this division has resulted in neither embarrassment nor friction.

DIPLOMAS FOR WAR DOGS.

They Will Bear Testimony to the Grand Work of the Canine Heroes.

When hostilities ceased some 18,000 dogs were on the western front, fighting to make the world unsafe for dachshunds.

The Dog Owners' Association of England, therefore, is planning to have diplomas awarded to dogs that distinguished themselves as good soldiers during the war.

This is a movement worthy of commendation, for there are many things to be said in behalf of the dog. He is brave, honest, and loyal. He is never a coward, a cheater or a liar. Even in the height of flea season he is a consistent optimist, not only looking on the bright side of life at all times, but possessing a happy sense of humor.

He can grin, smile or laugh. He is a good fellow. He knows how to take a joke. You can hit him with your fist hard enough to jar his back teeth loose, and if you do it with a smile he will respond by laughing heartily with his tail.

The dog is a real gentleman because he is equally at home in any company. It does not embarrass him even when thrown in the presence of persons he has never met before in a social way. With equal adaptability, he can romp with the children, go hunting with the big boys, or sit quietly at home with the old folks and help them mediate in their lonely hours.

If born in poverty and obscurity he will never desert those he loves and cherishes for gayer scenes or the blandishments of more affluent associates. Even the blind and helpless beggar, shivering on a windswept corner, knows his dog would not forsake him if all the millionaires in the world went parading by with their arms fairly loaded with dog biscuits, raw bones and alley cats.

It is pleasing to learn that the soldier dog is going to get a diploma. He will accept it with modesty and gratitude depicted in every wag of his tail.—Thrift Magazine.

NOVEL CASES IN THE COURTS

The case of Riley vs. Interstate Business Man's Acc. Assn. before the Supreme Court of Iowa was a suit based on the meaning of a clause in an accident insurance policy exempting the insurer from liability if the insured died from "poison voluntarily or involuntarily taken." The insured went to a drug store for a strong dose of a certain cholera mixture which he had previously taken, containing a tincture of opium and chloreform. In some way the druggist put strychnine into the mixture, which caused the death of the insured in less than an hour. The insurer contended that the claim was barred by the exemption as to poison taken voluntarily or involuntarily. The court, in upholding the contention, said:

"Deceased could not have intended to take a fatal dose of strychnine. He did not voluntarily do so. Its presence in the mixture was unknown to him. There was no exercise of the volition or will in the act of taking the poison, except in so far as the same was a necessary part of the taking of the concoction. The poison was taken independently of his will or volition, and therefore involuntarily. Thus construed, the language employed in the exception contained in the policy is given its usual and ordinary meaning. We cannot, therefore, escape the conclusion that the poison contained in the mixture and which caused the death of deceased was involuntarily taken by him, and that the facts bring the case clearly within the exception of the policy, and that no recovery can be had thereon."

The case of Clow versus Worrington, in the Springfield Court of Appeals, Missouri, involved the question as to whether an adult son or daughter has a rightful claim for compensation for services rendered in the father's household. The decision was as follows:

"The undisputed evidence in this case shows that the appellant, Arpha E. Clow, was brought to the home of her father, Nathaniel Greninger, at the time she claims her service began, she having just prior thereto lost her husband, being left with a very small amount of property and two young children. She remained in the home of her father until his death, and then at the home of her mother for several years subsequent to the death of her father, and from the evidence it is clearly shown that she rendered valuable services to her two parents during her stay with them. Her children were reared in this home until they were old enough to leave and make their own way, and she did little else than care for the home and her father and mother.

"As we view this case, under the evidence most favorable to the claimant, it shows that the widowed daughter, with two children, was taken into the home of her father, where she rendered valuable service to her mother and father, and in return therefor, aside from the satisfaction of fulfilling the moral obligation due from her to her parents, she received as well a living and a home for herself and two young children, and that at most the father, in addition to giving her a home, did at times express a desire or an intention to give or leave her something more than a child's part, but such intention was expressed by him as a recognition of gratitude rather than a legal obligation which bound him to pay."

The Court of Appeals of New York in Dozier vs. Johnson as Fire Commissioner reverses a ruling of the lower courts dismissing the complaint in a suit for damages for personal injuries through being struck by the Fire Commissioner's car, and holds that a cause of action existed. The court held:

The Fire Commissioner of the City of New York may be liable in damages for an accident caused by speeding an automobile through the streets of the city on a tour of inspection of fire houses, when the car in which he was riding was driven by a fireman assigned to that duty by the Commissioner and subject to his orders; it being a question for the jury whether the defendant permitted, after a reasonable opportunity to protest, the driving of the car at a dangerous speed, or by his silence acquiesced therein.

The latest ruling by the Court of Appeals in a suit for damages for the sale of unwholesome food is in Rinaldi vs. Mohican Company, involving the sale of pork containing trichina, in which the court ruled:

An action for damages from eating unwholesome meat purchased by the plaintiff at the defendant's market for immediate consumption may be maintained upon the ground of breach of implied warranty to the purchaser of its fitness, if not appearing that the plaintiff examined the goods, or having examined them, failed to discover defects which should have been found. The mere purchase by a customer from a retail dealer in foods of an article ordinarily used for human consumption impliedly makes known to the vendor the purpose for which the article is required, and where the buyer may assume that the seller has an opportunity to examine the article, it is unexplained, conclusive evidence of reliance on his skill or judgment.

The dictation of a letter to a stenographer by an officer of a corporation, in whose employ the stenographer was, is now held to be not a publication when done in the course of business, although formerly a different view was taken. The case is Cartwright Caps Company vs. Fischel, reported in 115 Miss. 359. The opinion of the court in part reads as follows:

"The appellant in this case is a corporation, and, of course, can act only through agents, and the acts of both the President and the stenographer to whom the letter was dictated are the acts of the corporation. In our opinion, under the present conditions, the dictation of a letter to a stenographer, when employed by the persons or corporation as a stenographer in the business, is not a sufficient publication, in the absence of any repetition by the person or stenographer to other persons."

A constitutional provision declaring that in all criminal prosecutions accused shall have the right to a public trial, is not infringed because the courtroom is not large enough to include all persons, or because of an order closing the door after the room is filled. Nor is it infringed because to preserve decorum disorderly persons are ejected or excluded. But it is infringed by an order of the court to the bailiffs to refuse admittance to members of the public not already in the courtroom, and to prevent persons then in the courtroom, and leaving, from returning, notwithstanding that an exception is made as to newspaper men and attorneys. State vs. Keeler, 52 Mon., 261.

WHAT A TREATY LOOKS LIKE

By HAROLD KOPPEL.

WHAT kind of documents are these which the United States of America has negotiated with other nations during its life as an independent nationality?

Now that we are about to negotiate another treaty, second only in importance to us to that one in which England, realizing that she could not reconquer her former Colonies, concluded the treaty that gave us our being as a nation, let us take a peep into the plain little room in the State Department in Washington and see what they look like.

Around the walls are boxes, cylinders, portfolios, and cases in which our own treaties repose. These are with European, Asiatic, African, South and Central American nations, and with some former island kingdoms. Even those from the oddest countries are placed in commonplace-looking cases, with the exception of one treaty with the Celestial Empire. The Chinese sent it over in a bag, and so it is kept today.

Parchment was, of course, always used in the days when this Republic was in its swaddling clothes, and as it has always been deemed safer to write important documents of this nature in hand by pen and ink (or quill and ink as the case might have been) so this custom still prevails, and there are no typewritten treaties in the original form. The originals are seldom disturbed, for copies are kept in the State Department for reference when necessary, and there are many employes of the department who do not even know where the original treaties are guarded. Where we have concluded agreements with nations speaking a tongue other than our own, it has invariably been the custom to write the treaty in our own language and in that of the nation with which we were making the agreement. Usually the English version is written in a column down the left hand side of the sheet and the other version on the right hand side. When this is done our own commissioners sign their names first under our side and the foreign envoys sign under the names of our plenipotentiaries, while on the side in the foreign language the foreign representatives sign first and our men sign under their signatures.

Seals of many sorts play a large part in the treaties, and generally there is a seal opposite the name of each envoy, while the Great Seal of the country from which we have received the treaty is usually attached by a silken ribbon or silken cord. In most cases this seal is of heavy brown wax, and to preserve it intact it is placed in a silver box, invariably round, sometimes plain, sometimes beautifully chased.

In the Name of the most Holy & Undivided Trinity.

It having pleased the divine Providence to dispose the Hearts of the most Serene and most Potent Prince George the Third by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France, & Ireland, Defender of the Faith, Duke of Brunswick and Luneberg, Arch-Treasurer and Prince Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, etc., and of the United States of America, to forget all past misunderstanding and Differences that have unhappily interrupted the good Correspondence and Friendship which they mutually wish to restore; and to establish such a beneficial and satisfactory Intercourse between the two Countries upon the Ground of reciprocal Advantage and mutual convenience as may promote and secure to both perpetual Peace, Harmony —

And so it goes on for its full length with its various clauses until the last page is reached, whereupon it ends as follows:

—without Difficulty and without requiring any Compensation.

Article 10th: The solemn Ratification of the present Treaty expedited in good & due Formshall, be exchanged between the Contracting Parties in the Space of Six Months, or sooner if possible, to be computed from the Day of the Signature of the present Treaty. In Witness whereof we the undersigned their Ministers Plenipotentiary, have in their Names and in Virtue of our Full Powers, signed with our Hands the present Definitive Treaty, and caused the Seals of our Arms to be affixed thereto.

Done at Paris, this third day of September, in the Year of Our Lord, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three.

Owing to delays in the instructions to the American delegates, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, John Jay, and Henry Laurens, the treaty was not finally signed until Sept. 3, 1783, by King George, who wished to be sure that the American envoys had full authority to execute the provisions embodied in the treaty, although the preliminary draft of the treaty was signed Nov. 12, 1782. It was almost a year after this, Jan. 14, 1784, before it was confirmed by Congress. Then another delay ensued, until the King set the seal of his approval on it. This was done April 9, and it finally became effective. In the beginning Richard Oswald was the British Commissioner, but before it was finally completed he had been recalled, and David Hartley, a member of Parliament from Hull, who had opposed the war with America, was appointed Commissioner.

This treaty is almost severe looking in its style of writing, with but little of the fancy flourishes and curlings that are much in evidence on some of the other treaties. The signature of George III., which reads, "George R[ex.]" is still plainly readable. It has silk ribbons with tassled ends of red and gold cord, and the wax seal is in a silver box six inches in diameter.

Previous to this treaty we had already concluded one with France, in which our independence and sovereignty were recognized. Benjamin Franklin, Silas Dean, and Arthur Lee went to Paris as Envoys of the Continental Congress to King Louis. This is written on parchment, with the French seal attached by a gold and blue cord. This seal is in a round box of solid silver, and King Louis's own private seal is on the top of the box to show that the other has not been tampered with.

Upon the conclusion of the war of 1812 with Great Britain a treaty was signed in Ghent between John Quincy Adams, James Bayard, Henry Clay, who had left the Speaker's chair in the House to serve as an Envoy; Jonathan Russell, and Albert Gallatin for America and William Adams, Henry Goulburn, and Lord Gambier for Great Britain.

Cessation of hostilities was provided for and the restitution of territory that had been occupied by the British, with the exception of Grand Manan and Petit Manan Islands, the ownership of which was to be determined by further negotiations. A commission to define the boundary line between the United States and Canada was also provided for. It was two weeks after the signing of this treaty that the battle of New Orleans was fought, Jan. 8, 1814, in which the British were so disastrously defeated. This battle was fought because the news that the treaty had been concluded had not reached either the English or American forces engaged, owing to the slow methods of communication.

This treaty was a very ornate one, being bound in a cover of red velvet, with the crest of the Prince of Wales embroidered on it in gold cord. The seal is preserved in a gilded silver box, with the seal of Great Britain chased on the lid. The box is about 7 inches in diameter.

To all and singular to whom these presents shall come, Greeting:

Be it known, that I, James Madison, President of the United States of America, having seen and considered the written treaty, &c., by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, accept, ratify, and confirm, the same, and every clause and article thereof.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the said United States to be hereunto affixed, and signed the same with my hand.

Done at the City of Washington, this Seventeenth day of February, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and fifteen; and of the sovereignty and independence of the United States the thirty-ninth.

JAMES MADISON.

Our own treaties are usually written on what is known as "treaty paper," a heavy white bond. On both sides of the sheets is an ample margin, defined by a border line of black and a parallel line of red ink. Aside from this there is no other ornamentation on the paper unless the clerk who does the copying should happen to make an illuminated initial letter on the title page. The sheets are bound together finally with silk ribbon. A small red seal is imprinted opposite each signature, while the great seal of the United States, kept in the State Department, is affixed to the last page. We do not attach wax seals in silver boxes to the copies which we send to other countries.

Just 100 years ago we negotiated a treaty with Spain by which Florida was ceded to the United States. It is written in both English and Spanish, and ends as follows:

"In Witness whereof, We the Underwritten Plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and of His Catholic Majesty, have signed by virtue of our Powers, the present Treaty of Amity, Settlement, and Limits, and have thereunto affixed our Seals respectively.

"Done at Washington, this Twenty-second Day of February, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Nineteen.

"JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.
"LUIS DI ORIOSY."

A secret treaty was signed by this country and Mexico at the conclusion of the Mexican War. Some of its terms were kept secret because of the fear of the Mexican Government of the effect on its own people, who, although badly beaten, might have swept the Government from power in a revolutionary movement if it became generally known that California had been ceded to the United States. This was the treaty of Guadelupe Hidalgo, signed Feb. 2, 1848.

Make Ready for the Home Coming

What finer greeting for those boys who have served overseas than new furniture and home things to welcome their return?

Home means more to the man just from the front than it ever did before. He looks forward to enjoying its comforts and pleasures more than he does to anything else.

This is your greatest opportunity to make him happy and keep him so,—to make everything at home seem just a little better than he ever dreamed it was. Brighten up each room with new furniture, rugs, draperies. Welcome him with the things he will appreciate most.

Special to Soldiers, Sailors, Marines

We ask no deposit from men who have been in the service, their mothers, wives and wives-to-be. Come in and ask how this works. You get the goods at once and pay for them in weekly or monthly amounts as convenient.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK

TSCHAIKOVSKY and Liszt make an orchestral program for the Philharmonic men this afternoon in Carnegie Hall. The Symphony No. 6, "Pathétique," is preceded by Tschaikovsky's overture, "The Voyevoda," and after it are Liszt's symphonic poem, "Tasso," as well as an "Epilogue" to the same, and his Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2.

Efrem Zimbalist, the Russian violinist, will be the added star at this evening's Metropolitan concert, with Marie Rappold, Paul Althouse, and José Mardones.

Alma Case, at her annual recital tomorrow evening in Carnegie Hall, will sing an old air of Durante, another set by Weckerlin, Beethoven's "Faithful Animals," Mozart's "Porgi Amor" from "Figaro," and lyrics by Sjogren, Kjerulf, Grieg, Fourdrain, Nerini, Duvet, Horsman, John Rodendeck, H. T. Stephens, Roland Farley, and C. Gilpross.

The Schumann Club tomorrow, at Aeolian Hall, led by P. R. Stephens, will sing arrangements by Deems Taylor for men's chorus from old Italian airs of Pergolesi, Fasolo, Cesti, Bassani, groups by Grieg, and from the old Scotch, Irish from Lully to Faure and Duparc, and English by J. B. Fox, Dorothy Hereford Lane, and Hatton.

The Philadelphia Orchestra on Tuesday afternoon at Carnegie Hall is to give the third of its five programs in New York this season with Debussy's "Sirenes," sung by women's voices from the Schola Cantorum. Stokowski has Beethoven's symphony No. 8. Efrem Zimbalist will play Mozart's violin concerto in A, and Debussy's "Three Nocturnes" will include "Nuages" and "Fetes."

The Flonzaley Quartet at its second concert on Tuesday evening will play Beethoven's quartet Op. 18, No. 6, in B flat, preceded by that of Vincent d'Indy in D major, op. 35, and followed by an unfinished quartet in manuscript by Paul Roussel, since 1916 "missing" at Verdun.

Mischa Seidel will reappear in violin recital Tuesday evening at Carnegie Hall, playing Tartini's "The Devil's Trill" with cadenza by Auer, Wieniawski's concerto in D minor, Beethoven's "Romance" in G, Bazzini's "Ronde des Lutins," airs of Chopin and Wachtler arranged by Kreisler, and Cui's "Hebrew Lullaby."

Alfred Cortot, the French pianist, will play Schumann's posthumous "Theme with Five Variations" from the "Etudes Symphoniques" at his last appearance Tuesday afternoon in Aeolian Hall for the Friends of Music. He has also Liszt's sonata dedicated to Schumann, and pieces by Schubert, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Ravel, Faure, Debussy, and Dukelsky.

Julia Allie Miller will sing an air from Massenet's "Herodiade," and Ethel Leginska will play Liszt's E flat pianoforte concerto, at the Philharmonic's "Symphony" concert in Carnegie Hall on Wednesday night. Mr. Stransky has Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Dvorak's "Carnival," Dukas's "Sorcerer" and Ivanoff's "Caucasian Sketches."

Sergei Rachmaninoff will play his C sharp minor prelude and others of his works at a benefit of the Society for Prevention of Tuberculosis on Thursday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. He opens with Beethoven's C minor variations, Godowsky's airs from Dandrieu and Loelly, Tansig's arrangements of two Strauss waltzes, "Forest Voices" and "Man Lives but Once," and closing with Liszt's Rhapsody No. 2.

Rudolph Ganz will give his Aeolian recital on Thursday afternoon in aid of the Society of Professors of the Paris Conservatoire. He will play Chopin's sonata in B minor, Op. 58, with Beethoven's thirty-two variations among earlier pieces of Bach, Mozart, Haydn, Weber, and a final group from Scott, Ganz, Griffes, Carpenter, MacDowell, and Debussy.

Jascha Heifetz will play the Beethoven violin concerto with the Philharmonic Orchestra at its concerts on Thursday evening and Friday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Mr. Stransky will conduct Beethoven's overture "Leonore" No. 3, and the "Fantastic" symphony of Berlioz.

Harold Bauer and Jacques Thibaud on Thursday evening, in Aeolian Hall, will open a cycle of Beethoven's nine sonatas for piano and violin. In the first evening are included the sonatas in D major, Op. 12; in G major, Op. 96, and in C minor, Op. 30. The later dates are March 4 and 31.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch leads with Chopin's B minor sonata, Op. 58, an all-Chopin program, at his only recital on Friday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. He has also twelve preludes, Op. 28; nocturnes in E and G, the A minor mazurka, G minor ballade, E minor valse, and rondo, Op. 16.

Kosçak Yamada, the Japanese composer, announces a second orchestral concert in Carnegie Hall next Friday evening, when he will conduct his own "Triumph and Peace" symphony, his choral "Marie Magdalene," and Wagner's "Tannhäuser" overture, Clarence Whitehill will sing "Wotan's Farewell" in English and folksongs in Japanese.

Marvin Maazel will give an Aeolian recital on Friday evening, when he has Schumann's "Fantasy Pieces," Mozart's A major sonata, a Chopin group, and others of Godowsky, Brahms, and Rubinstein.

The Symphony Society's third concert for children Saturday morning in Aeolian Hall will present marches from "Tannhäuser" and "The Prophet," David's "The Rain," Delibes's "Nalla" waltz, an adagio from Saint-Saëns's Symphony No. 2, and a 'cello solo by William Willeke.

Josef Hofmann's "all-American" program Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Hall will include these works of living composers: "Introduction and Fugue," Op. 24, Clayton Johns; "Twilight Fancies," Op. 7, No. 3, Rubin Goldmark; "Interlude" and "Joyance," Edward Royce; six "Country Pictures," Op. 9, D. G. Mason; "Romance," D flat, De Koven; "Valse Gracile," Op. 94, H. W. Parker; "Birds at Dawn," Fannie Dillon; "Fire-Flies," Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, and sonata, Op. 20, Alexander McFadyen.

Max Rosen, who has appeared twice with orchestra this season, will give his first recital Saturday evening in Carnegie Hall, playing Nardini's concerto and that of Paganini in D major, as well as violin pieces by Cottenet, Juon, Schumann, Auer, Kreisler, and Godowsky.

PICTURE PLAYS AND PEOPLE.

THERE is impetus for speculation in the report from Los Angeles that D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, and Charlie Chaplin have combined to produce and distribute their own pictures. The report is silent as to Mr. Griffith's definite part in the program, but it seems a fair assumption that he will be the director in chief of productions. Mr. Fairbanks is quoted as saying that an alleged move by a group of producers in the direction of controlling the motion picture industry was partially responsible for the new combination. It is thought that the contractual obligations of the principals will prevent their putting their arrangement into operation for some months.

Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, has purchased the motion picture rights to Hall Caine's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me." Hugh Ford, Supervising Director of the Famous Players-Lasky Eastern Studios, will stage the production for the screen, and Arthur Edwin Krows has been engaged to write the scenario. Mr. Ford has gone to California, where he will produce the film at the Lasky studios.

The Western Electric Company has leased the Lexington Theatre for tomorrow and Tuesday evenings for the exhibition of four industrial motion pictures before its employes of the New York district. One of the pictures, "A Square Deal for His Wife," was made by Harry Levey, Manager of the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Company.

Hugo Riesenfeld, the new Managing Director of the Rialto and Rivoli, is reported to have announced his working schedule as follows: "I will conduct the first overture at the Rialto at 2:15 each day—then to my office at the Rivoli for the transaction of business affairs until 5:30—and from then on at the Rialto, my workshop, where the evening will be all art and no business."

Lewis S. Geffen has resigned as assistant to the Director of Publicity at the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres. His future activities are yet to be announced, although it is understood that he has made an editorial connection.

FARRAR IN "FIAMMETTE"

TWO operas by Xavier Leroux will be introduced to New York in the next fortnight, as were a pair of Massenets by rival troupes last year. "Le Chemineau," produced in 1907, waits for the Chicago stars, while "La Reine Fiammette" will have its American première next Friday evening at the Metropolitan, with a huge cast of twenty-three names.

The music of "Fiammette" is by the French composer who, born in Italy, became one of the foremost followers of Massenet, while the book is virtually the work by Catulle Mendes, who adapted it for opera libretto. The play appeared in 1909. In lyric form it had its first performance at the Opéra Comique in Paris in 1903.

Fiammette.....Geraldine Farrar
Orlando.....Hipolito Lazaro
Giorgio d'Ast.....Adamo Didur
Caesar Sforza.....Leon Rothier
Camille.....Flora Perini
Agramente.....Kathleen Howard
.....Kittie Beale
Lenore.....Lenore Sparkes
Rose.....Mary Ellis
Marie.....Marie Tiffany
Lenore.....Lenore Sparkes
Mary.....Mary Ellis
Marie.....Marie Mattfeld
Boys.....Mary Mellish, Cecil Arden
Angelo.....Mario Laurenti
Angelo.....Angelo Bada
.....Albert Reiss
.....Giordano Paltrinieri
.....Pietro Audisio
Pastor.....Paolo Ananian
Novices.....Phillis White, Veni Warwick
Conductor, Pierre Monteux.

The scenes comprised in the four acts have been planned and painted by the Italian artist, Boris Anisfeld, who also designed the costumes. The stage direction is in charge of Richard Orwynski, and Giulio Setti has trained the chorus.

Story of Leroux's Opera.

"La Reine Fiammette" has its scene laid in Italy of the sixteenth century, the imaginary kingdom of Bologna, whose Queen is heroine of the play. Orlanda is described as "young, charming, with more heart than brains, changing her favorite courtiers as she would her garments." Giorgio d'Ast, an adventurer, and illegal consort, has been secretly trying to succeed the madcap Queen to her throne in one of the political intrigues of the time. Caesar Sforza, the Cardinal nephew," who has devised this plot, comes to Bologna and selects as assassin of the Queen a young student, Daniello, whom he persuades to vengeance by telling him that Orlanda, likewise Fiammette, after a fleeting passion for his only brother, has had the youth done to death.

One evening in the Convent of the Friars of Assisi, the young monk unknowingly meets Orlanda, masquerading as another self, frivolous Fiammette. They are mocking love passages, they trade amorous verses, going from jest to earnest as her charm proves irresistible. Before Daniel falls asleep, despite the poet, he reveals to his beautiful unknown that he must be in Bologna on April 6 to perform an act of vengeance. A woman of the Court brings warning of the plot to kill the Queen. Fiammette, daring as she is frivolous, awakes her would-be murderer and reminds him of the act of vengeance he must perform, even handing him the dagger.

Scene in Bologna's Court.

The Court of Bologna is assembled for a grand fête, the Queen arriving calm, poised. With watchful eye Orlanda marks the movements of Daniello. Approaching her, he is about to strike, when he recognizes in her the adored Fiammette, and his dagger falls. The Cardinal orders his arrest as Orlanda forgives her abdication to save him. She prepares to fly with Daniello, first distributing her jewels among three faithful favorites, the little Fools, Viola, Violette, and Violine. But freedom is not for Fiammette.

She is ordered to trial for heresy, and Daniello is compelled to act as her Confessor. From her he learns the story of his brother's murder was false. He attacks the Cardinal, but Sforza repels the blow and replies, "Let them be united in death as they have wished." Fiammette and Daniello are led off through a flowery alley to their "nuptial altar," the headsman's block, as the curtain falls.

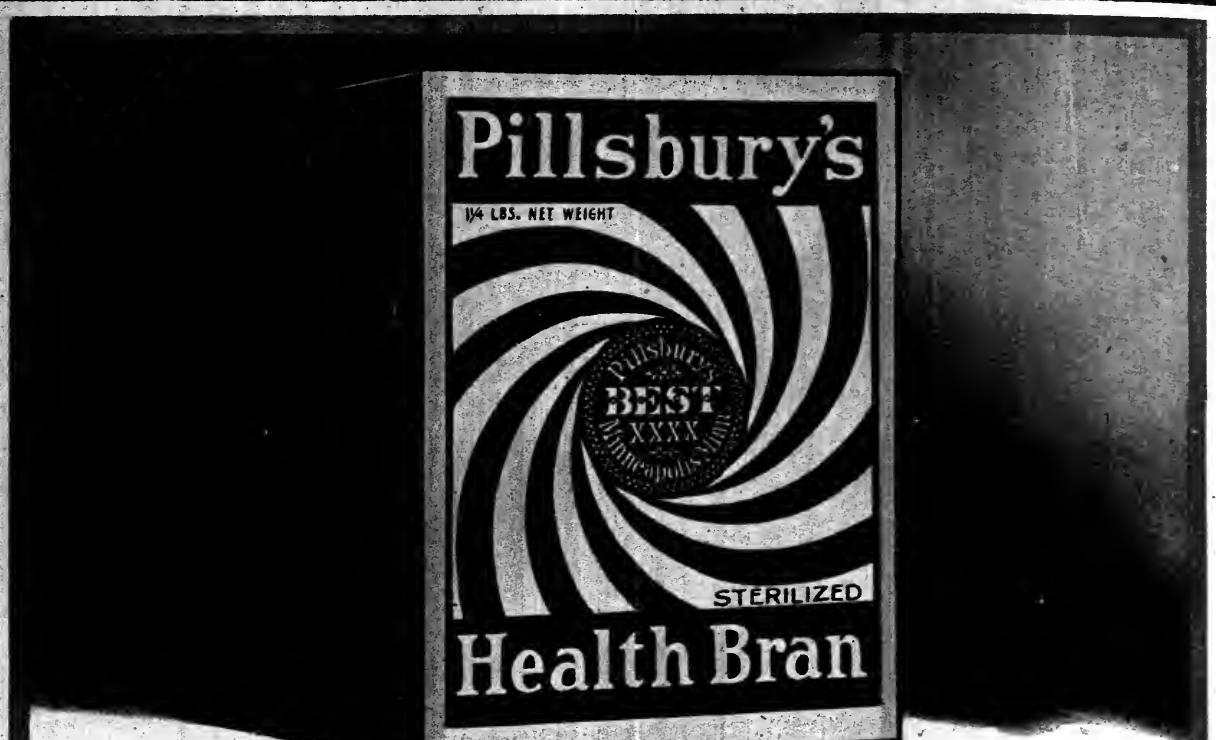
La-May Face Powder Is Pure!
—No White Lead—No Rice Powder—
It Really Stays On Unusually Well.

Up to the present time it has been almost impossible to get a face powder to stay on longer than it takes to put it on. You powder your nose nicely and the first gust of wind or the first puff of your handkerchief and away goes the powder, leaving your nose red, shiny and conspicuous, probably just at the very moment when you would give anything to appear at your best. A specialist has at last perfected a pure powder that women say stays on wonderfully well. It does not contain white lead or starchy rice powder (Poudre de Riz) to make it stay on. White lead poisons the skin and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that encourages enlarged pores and unsightly complexions. This improved formula contains a medicinal powder doctors use to heal the skin. In fact, this new powder helps to prevent and reduce enlarged pores and irritations. It is called La-may (French, Poudre L'Amé). Because it is pure and because it stays on so well, it is already sold everywhere. The large size is only fifty cents and the trial size is twenty-five cents. When you use this delightful La-may and see how wonderfully it beautifies your complexion, you will understand why it is now used by over a million American women.



Delicious---Corrective

DELICIOUS, golden brown bran-muffins, bread, cookies, etc., made according to the special recipes on the Pillsbury's Health Bran package, instantly appeal to all appetites. Their rich, nutlike flavor and natural, laxative effect commend them to a place in the daily diet of every American home.

Pillsbury's Health Bran is milled especially for human consumption. Its extra large, clean, sterilized flakes supply the roughage necessary to promote normal digestive action. Physicians recommend it.

Insist upon Pillsbury's—the Health Bran made by the millers of Pillsbury's Best Flour. Packed in sanitary, airtight cartons.

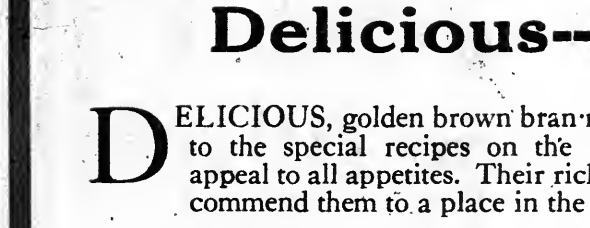
The Nestlé Permanent Hair Wave



Every permanent hair-wave should be finished with the Nestol Comb, the intelligent devise here illustrated. When a permanent wave at the Nestle establishment is concluded, this device is applied, the hair dried, combed, brushed and dressed, leaving a result fit to be called really well dressed. This Nestol Comb has become immensely popular. Use it at home if you had a permanent wave or if your hair has a natural inclination to wave.

Price $2.00 and $2.50, (4 and 5 inch sizes.)

Illustrated booklet free.

$2 Invested in Vogue

Will Save You $200

Severity has been the mode in war time. Now—what is to be the new silhouette? What the favored colors? How can you assure yourself added distinction of dress, and save yourself from misguided or haphazard buying? The secret is not more money. It is Vogue's authoritative, advance fashion advice.

The gown you buy and never wear is the really expensive gown. Gloves, boots, hats, that miss being exactly what you want, are the ones that cost you more than you can afford.

Vogue suggests that before you spend a single penny on new clothes, before you even plan your wardrobe, you consult its great Spring and Summer Fashion numbers. Begin with the Forecast Number, ready now.

© Vogue

The cape continues to lead the mode among discriminating women. This model, reflecting in its line the silhouette of Spring, is made up in blue serge, with bands of heavy blue silk jersey.

9 Numbers of Vogue for $2

Forecast of Spring Fashions — Feb. 1

Extra complimentary copy

The earliest advance information from Paris on the new silhouette—saving you from the costliest of all errors, a wrong start.

Spring Millinery — Feb. 15

The hundred best hats produced by the great Paris milliners; shown with their appropriate gowns, veils and coiffures.

Spring Patterns and New Materials — Mar. 1

Paris Openings — Mar. 15

The inimitable models of the Grandes Maisons, as daring, as surprising, as inimitable as ever, determining the mode.

Spring Fashions — Apr. 1

Brides Number — Apr. 15

The bride, the bride's mother, the bridesmaids, the gifts, the breakfast, the luggage, the wedding trip, the reception, the new home.

Smart Fashions for Limited Incomes — May 1

Must you economize? And yet look chic? A Vogue-trained dollar is a dollar doubled.

Summer Homes and Hostess Number — May 15

Summer Fashions — June 1

Travel and Resorts — June 15

Where to go, what to wear, suitable luggage for all sorts of trips.

IN the next few months, during the very period in which Vogue's special Fashion Numbers appear, you will be selecting your entire wardrobe for the coming Spring and Summer, and spending hundreds of dollars for the suits, hats, gowns and accessories that you select.

CONSIDER then, that for $2, a tiny fraction of your loss on one ill-chosen hat or gown, you may secure ten issues of Vogue—an assurance of valuable new ideas and an insurance against costly failures. These 10 issues of Vogue, bought separately, would cost you $3.50. Mail the coupon now!

Special Offer — Don't Send Money Now!

If you mail the coupon at once, we will begin your subscription with the Forecast Number, thus giving you TEN Numbers of Vogue instead of NINE, without extra charge. You need not bother to inclose a cheque, or even write a letter; the coupon will do.

Sign, tear off, and mail the coupon. You will get the Forecast Number at once

VOGUE, 19 West 44th St., New York City

Send me NINE numbers of Vogue, beginning with the Spring Millinery Number, and I will remit $2 on receipt of bill. It is understood that if this order reaches you in time you will send me a copy of the Forecast Number without extra charge, making TEN numbers in all.

"—and use this powder for your tender, bleeding gums"

Only dentists understand the real dangers of neglect in caring immediately and properly for spongy, tender, bleeding or receding gums—warning signals of pyorrhea.

Pyorrhea attacks and destroys the gum tissues and bony sockets which hold the teeth in place. Mastication becomes painful; the gums ache and bleed; teeth loosen and eventually fall out; the general health is affected by the bacteria developed under pyorrhetic conditions.

Pyorrhocide Powder is the preparation most widely prescribed by dentists to prevent pyorrhea and to aid in restoring affected gums to a normally healthy condition. As a part of the Dentinol and Pyorrhocide Method, Pyorrhocide Powder has demonstrated its value in maintaining gum vitality and in correcting all unhealthy conditions which lead to pyorrhea.

The Dentinol and Pyorrhocide Method originated in the Pyorrhocide Clinic, New York, ten years ago. A staff of scientific investigators and dental specialists devoted many years to studying the causes and effects of pyorrhea and how it could be prevented and treated successfully. Dentinol, to be applied by the dentist, and Pyorrhocide Powder, to be used at home, were developed.

Since 1908 dentists from all parts of the world have been instructed in the application of the method. It is being used successfully by thousands of dentists.

Pyorrhocide Powder's effectiveness is due to the presence of Dentinol in combination with other healing ingredients. Used twice daily, Pyorrhocide Powder acts quickly and surely. It relieves tenderness; heals bleeding gums. Spongy gums are made hard and firm. Their power of resistance against pyorrhea infection is increased.

Pyorrhocide Powder retards tartar formation. It cleans and polishes the teeth.

Tooth, gum and mouth health can be maintained only by co-operating with a dentist and by the regular use, twice daily, of a medium like Pyorrhocide Powder compounded to meet the requirements proved essential by years of scientific research and clinical experience.

Pyorrhocide Powder is economical because a dollar package contains six months' supply. For sale by all dental supply houses and good drug stores.

New Forces of Disintegration in Russia

Syndicalism, More Violent Than Bolshevism, Threatens to Thrust Unhappy Nation Into New Chaos of Lawlessness, Says Manuel Komroff, Just Back from Russia

NOW comes Manuel Komroff with the "inside" story of Bolshevist failure and misrule in Russia.

Komroff, an artist and writer, has been identified for twelve years with the revolutionary movement, and he left New York nearly two years ago on the same boat with four hundred other enthusiasts to support Kerensky. In Petrograd he was on intimate terms with leaders of various radical factions, and often attended their councils. He returned the other day depressed by what he had seen, but confident that with allied help Russia could win a way out of the present chaos to stable government.

Whether Bolshevism can continue to dominate Russia seems to Komroff doubtful. The chief factor menacing it is Syndicalism, which goes to more violent extremes. Unless a political truce is made possible, the nation seems likely to careen to the final verge of lawlessness.

"Although the Bolsheviki were prepared to take over the Kerensky Government," said Komroff, "they were not at all prepared to hold and conduct a nation of a hundred and eighty millions of people through a period of reconstruction. They had knocked out the foundation stone of the existing social system, and even the leaders were not ready to assume control. They lacked men of brains and the necessary outside aid. Smaller nationalities seceded and proclaimed themselves republics, such as Finland and Siberia. Little by little, as though from leprosy, parts dropped away.

"And, in addition to this, there was Germany, sucking the very blood of Russia.

"To start with, the Bolsheviki took control of the State in order to put their theories into practice. Ultimately this degenerated into a struggle for power. Any method which would help them to gain control they considered legitimate, and if they have taken German gold, that is their excuse. All over Russia, after the Brest-Litovsk treaty, it was known that German money was being received, and accepting it was extenuated on the ground that even the devil's money was good, if it helped the revolutionary cause. In the same way violence was justified to the Bolshevist mind.

"I believe it was Karl Marx who first set up the theory that, because capital was being concentrated in the hands of a few, and because these few would gradually diminish, a point would be reached when the producer would automatically become the consumer. When that time came, he said, it would be an easy matter for the State to take control of industry. It is worth noting that many of our ablest sociologists have abandoned this theory. Perhaps no man's social theories have suffered more by this war than the theories of Karl Marx.

"It ought to be said that the reason for the failure of the Marxian theories in the test of war was not that he was a German, but that the theories lacked idealism and vision.

"The Bolshevist theories are Marxian theories. That they were ridiculously inadequate was soon apparent; but the Bolsheviki knew nothing to do but to hold on to the last. This meant violence. Counter-revolutionists were suppressed with the utmost severity. Opposition newspapers were closed. Maxim Gorky, who had been exiled by the Czar for revolutionary utterances, could please neither Kerensky nor Trotzky. His paper, Nova Zishn, [New Life,] was suppressed by both of them because he criticised the administrations; and once, during a temporary period of publication, he wrote bitterly: 'We are in sad plight indeed if we have substituted for the old reign of tyranny a new reign of terror.'

Catherine Breshkovsky, "Little Grandmother of the Revolution," Seated in a Chair Used by the Czar Before He Was Dethroned by the Russian Revolution.

"The 'Ideal Socialistic State' was fighting and is fighting today for its own existence. Civil war is raging. The theories of the Bolsheviki are being stretched to the breaking point. One reason there is such tension is that those theories, although they might possibly be imposed with some success on another people, can never be applied fruitfully to a nation of the Russian temperament.

"The trouble with the Russian peasant is that his soul bothers him. Oftentimes he can't sleep at night on account of it. These illiterate men are pondering the riddle of the universe and discussing it daily as though nothing ever had been said or written about it.

"Every Russian has within him a little Tolstoy, who asks at every step, 'What good is this?' or, 'How do I know?' All of them are far more spiritual than we. One of the obstacles to the industrialization of Russia is the fact that the Russian has little interest in material things. That is why Bolshevism, which is wholly materialistic, has proved such a colossal failure. It is one-sided. It lacks vision.

"It was because of the Russian temperament that the revolutionists made art immune from damage. The statue of the Czar was not molested, however great may have been the surge of wrath against him when the men he had oppressed came into power. The statue of Catherine II. in the Nevsky Prospekt stands uninjured, although I have seen a red flag flying from her sceptre. The eagles over the imperial gateways and even over the entrance to the famous fortress of Sts. Peter and Paul were unharmed. These things were held to be art, and the slogan was 'Hands off!'

"I remember well my first visit to the Winter Palace. The red carpet was ugly, the tapestries uglier. The iron fretwork of the railings was a poor imitation of something Renaissance. I passed through a long corridor with frescoes like the icing of an expensive wedding cake. Then I emerged into the rotunda, and beheld that vulgar inlaid wooden floor, as though done with German patience on a bad theme. The square columns were of bright green malachite with gilded Corinthian caps. The walls were scarlet, and the hideously ornate chandelier added the final touch to an atmosphere of the motion-picture house.

"When I arrived at the private office of the former Czar, where Catherine Breshkovsky was, I said to her: 'Little Grandmother, how can you live in such a horrible place?'

"'Really,' she admitted, 'it is worse here than in prison, and uglier than the sin this place sheltered; but now that we are free, art will be free, too. We must have bad as well as good, without censorship. The bad will die, it is hoped, through its own vulgarity.'

"Then I understood why even revolutionary passion had spared those execrable example of aristocratic bad taste. For the Russian aristocracy has always had bad taste. Its members borrowed from France the worst of the Bougereau school and from England its worst mid-Victorian. They censored the art of Russia. They would not even speak its language. You remember how Turgenieff's mistress said to him despairingly, 'When will you leave off that barbaric dialect?' And Turgenieff, the master of Russian prose! And you remember how Tolstoy's works were printed in other countries and smuggled into Russia. Well, Russian is now the State language.

"So that some good has come of the Russian revolution, although the restoration of the language and the tolerance of bad art may seem light things to throw into the scale against tyranny and political intolerance. It must be remembered that most of the 'news' printed here about Bolshevism came, not from Russia, but from the enemies of the Bolsheviki, and most of it was false. But it is true that if you keep a man restrained, oppressed, censor and spy upon him, threaten him with personal violence, and then suddenly set him free, he will run wild. He will forget that liberty is not license. He will become drunk with freedom, and this is exactly what has happened in Russia.

"The entire nation is staggering. Not only are the Bolsheviki intoxicated with the lack of restraint and the sudden sense of power, but the Social Democrats, the Social Revolutionists, and the Syndicalists are in the same box.

"Something more must be told of the Syndicalists, who are an important factor over there: With the return of the political exiles to Russia came the ideas of French syndicalism. As the rich had fled and the army was then extremely busy at the front, there could be little opposition to extreme industrial unionization. No general strike was necessary. Those factory foremen who sided with the owners immediately got 'the wheelbarrow'—that is, they were put upon a wheelbarrow and gently trundled outside. There then remained nothing to do but to take over the factories, reorganize them, and divide the profits. This is what was done, not by the Bolsheviki, but by the Syndicalists.

"Syndicalism originally was supposed to be free of politics. It was not to meddle with the State. But as Governments have always opposed the Syndicalists, syndicalism came to include political activities. Contrary to the principles of socialism, it places industrial unionism first and politics second.

"In Russia large factories send Syndicalist delegates to the Soviets, and, as the political problems are uppermost there and as each delegate represents a great number of votes, their power is great. The Syndicalists have much in common with the Bolsheviki, but in industrial questions friction often occurs, as the State controls much of the raw products, especially those from mines not yet syndicalized, and also the means of transporation. The Bolsheviki hold a check on the Syndicalists, who must concede points in order to get material. They are discontented and have more than once put their protest into the form of strikes and slipshod labor. Obviously there is a diametric conflict between their theories of government and Bolshevism.

Why My Memory Rarely Fails Me and how the method of improving memory may be learned in a single evening

By DAVID M. ROTH

NOTE: When I asked Mr. Roth to tell in his own words, for nation-wide publication, the remarkable story of the development of his system for the cure of bad memories, I found him reluctant to talk about himself in cold print. When I reminded him that he could do no finer service than to share his story with others—just as he is sharing his method for obtaining a better memory with thousands who are studying his famous Memory Course—he cordially agreed to my proposal. And here is his story.—President Independent Corporation.

FIFTY members of the Rotary Club were seated in the banquet hall of the Hotel McAlpin in New York. I was introduced to each member in turn, and each gave me his telephone number and told me his occupation. An hour later, after they had changed seats while my back was turned to them, I called each man by name, gave his telephone number and named his occupation, without a single error.

The following evening, in the office of a large business institution, I asked the president of the concern to write down fifty words, numbers and names, and to number each item. An hour later I called out each item, and gave the number opposite which it had been written.

At another time I glanced at the license numbers of a hundred and five automobiles which passed. These numbers were written down by witnesses, in the order in which the cars passed. Later, I called each number correctly and gave the order in which the numbers went by.

From Seattle to New York I have appeared before salesmen's meetings, conventions, and Rotary Clubs giving demonstrations of my memory. I have met over 10,000 people in my travels. Yet I am quite sure I can call nearly every one of these men and women by name when I meet them, ask most of them how the lumber business is or the shoe business or whatever business they were in when I was first introduced to them.

People wonder at these memory feats. Hundreds have asked me how I can store so many facts, figures, and faces in my mind, and recall them at will. And they are even more mystified when I explain that my memory used to be so poor I would forget a man's name twenty seconds after I met him! In fact that was what led me to investigate and study the cause of poor memory and the remedy. For years I read books on Psychology, mental culture, memory and other subjects. All of these books were good, but none of them were definite, or easy enough. So I labored until I found out what it was that enabled me to remember some things while I forgot others. Finally I worked out a system that made my memory almost infallible.

I explained my system to a number of friends and they could hardly believe it possible. But some of them tried my method and invariably they told me they had improved their memory power in a week. They got the method the first evening and then developed it as far as they cared to go.

The principles which I had formulated in improving my own memory were so simple and so easy to apply that I decided to give my method to the world.

At first I taught my memory system in person. My classes, in Rotary Clubs, banks, department stores, railway offices, manufacturing plants and every kind of business institution grew amazingly in size and number. Memory teaching became my sole profession, and a wonderful experience it has been all the way from Seattle to New York City.

I soon realized that I could never hope to serve more than a small fraction of those who needed my memory system and were eager to take it up unless I put it into a home-study course which people could acquire without personal instruction.

The Independent Corporation, whose President, Mr. Karl V. S. Howland, had become interested in my work as a member of my Rotary Club class in New York, saw the large possibilities of my Course as an element in their broad program for personal efficiency and self-improvement.

So it was my pleasure to join forces with this great publishing house, and the Roth Memory Course, in seven simple lessons, was offered to the public at a price of $5 (correspondence courses having been sold hitherto at anywhere from $20 to $100.)

No money in advance was to be asked, the idea being that the Course must sell itself purely on its merits.

As you have doubtless observed, an extensive advertising campaign was launched by my publishers with full page announcements in all the leading periodicals of the country and in many leading newspapers.

This campaign has continued without a let-up and with ever growing momentum.

From the very start this advertising became successful. The idea spread. Orders came in from everywhere. Edition after edition of the lessons were printed and still thousands of orders could not be filled.

The promise was made that the Course would improve any man's or woman's memory in one evening. And it did! Letters of praise began to pour in almost as fast as the lessons were shipped—and have kept up ever since in a veritable flood.

DAVID M. ROTH

For example, Major E. B. Craft, Assistant Chief Engineer of the Western Electric Company, New York, wrote:

"Last evening was the first opportunity I had to study the course, and in one sitting I succeeded in learning the list of 100 words forward and backward, and to say that I am delighted with the method is putting it very mildly. I feel already that I am more than repaid in the real value and enjoyment that I have got out of the first lesson."

Read this letter from Terence J. McManus, of the firm of Olcott, Bonynge, McManus & Ernst, Attorneys and Counsellors at Law, 170 Broadway, and one of the most famous trial lawyers in New York.

"May I take occasion to state that I regard your service in giving this system to the world as a public benefaction. The wonderful simplicity of the method, and the ease with which its principles may be acquired, especially appeal to me. I may add that I already had occasion to test the effectiveness of the first two lessons in the preparation for trial of an important action in which I am about to engage."

Mr. McManus didn't put it a bit too strong. And here is just a quotation from H. O. (Multigraph) Smith, Division Manager of the Multigraph Sales Co. Ltd., in Montreal:

"Here is the whole thing in a nutshell: Mr. Roth has a most remarkable Memory Course. It is simple, and easy as falling off a log. Yet with one hour a day of practice anyone—I don't care who he is—can improve his Memory in a week and have a good memory in six months."

Then there is the amazing experience of Victor Jones, who increased his business $100,000 in six months! And there are hundreds and thousands of others who have studied the Course and who have secured greater benefit from it than they dreamed possible.

Perhaps the main reason why my method is so successful is because it is so ridiculously simple. You get the method of obtaining a remarkable Memory in one evening—in the very first lesson. Then you develop your memory to any point you desire through the other six lessons. There are only seven lessons in all. Yet the method is so thorough that your memory becomes your obedient slave. And instead of being hard work, it is as fascinating as a game. I have received letters from people who say the whole family gathers round the table for each lesson!

Men and women from coast to coast have thanked me for having made it so easy for them to acquire a good memory. As one man said:

"Memory and good judgment go hand in hand. Our judgment is simply the conclusions we draw from our experience, and our experience is only the sum total of what we remember. I now store away in my mind every valuable fact that relates to my business, whether it is something I hear or read, and when the proper time comes I recall all the facts I need. Before I studied the Roth Course it took me three times as long to gain experience simply because I forgot so many facts."

And how true that is! We say of elderly men that their judgment is "ripe." The reason it is ripe is because they have accumulated greater experience. But if we remember all the important facts we can have a ripened judgment 15 or 20 or 30 years sooner!

Thousands of sales have been lost because the salesman forgot some selling point that would have closed the order. Many men when they are called upon to speak fail to put over their message or to make a good impression because they are unable to remember just what they wanted to say.

Many decisions involving thousands of dollars have been made unwisely because the man responsible didn't remember all the facts bearing on the situation, and thus used poor judgment. In fact, there is not a day but that the average business man forgets to do from one to a dozen things that would have increased his profits. There are no greater words in the English language descriptive of business inefficiency than the two little words, "I forgot."

My pupils are gracious enough to say that nothing will make that fatal phrase obsolete so quickly as the memory system it has been my good fortune to evolve.

Mr. Roth has told his story. It now remains for you to turn it into dividends. Such an ambition will be helped, we are sure, if you will spend the fraction of time it requires to send for the complete Course on absolute approval.

After a few hours spent with the Roth Memory Course the fear as well as the tragedy of forgetting should be greatly eliminated. You will obtain a fascinating new sense of confidence and power.

Not only that, but you will have a sense of freedom that you never felt before. You will be freed of the memorandum pad, the notebook, and other artificial helps to which most of us are slaves.

So confident is the Independent Corporation, the publishers of the Roth Memory Course, that once you have an opportunity to see in your own home how easy it is to double, yes triple, your memory power that they are willing to send the course on free examination.

Don't send any money. Merely mail the coupon or write a letter and the complete course will be sent, all charges prepaid, at once. If you are not entirely satisfied, send it back any time within five days after you receive it and you will owe nothing.

On the other hand, if you are as pleased as are the thousands of other men and women who have used the course, send only $5 in full payment. You take no risk and you have everything to gain, so mail the coupon now.

"Bertrand Russell, although he advocated syndicalism, has pointed out that, in their effort to remedy the evils of capitalism, the Syndicalists themselves become a dreadful power, and are capable of more tyrannical violence than the capitalists. They are, of course, much more extreme in their views than the Bolsheviki, and so are the anarchists.

"Although anarchism looks to a Utopia in which all would receive according to their needs and give according to their abilities, many anarchists in Russia have become so impatient that they have adapted their ideas to syndicalism. Many of them consider syndicalism the working clothes of anarchism. Some call themselves 'Anarcho-Syndicalists.' Whether these are more far-seeing than the Bolsheviki is a question for debate. Certainly they are more extreme. They have entered the Soviets, too, and are causing much trouble there. They have taken over the greater part of Russian industry, and hold much of the land. It is only by constant compromise with the Syndicalists and the anarchists that the Bolsheviki can maintain their control, even backed by their growing armies. The Syndicalists are one of the greatest powers in Russia today, if not the greatest.

"There are degrees of radicalism, you see, in Russia. The world thought Kerensky a wild theorist, but as a matter of fact he was for a time the only Socialist in his Cabinet, and I do not think there ever were more than three Socialists in it. Kerensky was overthrown because he was too conservative, for one reason. Then Trotzky and Lenine, who were more extreme, came into power.

"The Bolsheviki want State control and ownership of all industry. They want the land for the people, or rather for those who can work it. The land would belong to those who work it only so long as they work it. The only certificate of ownership one would need would be to show that the soil was under cultivation. Once you stopped plowing, the land would cease to belong to you. And the Bolsheviki propose that only the plowman and those who work shall have the right to vote. They propose, therefore, an autocracy of the workers instead of an autocracy of the idlers, such as they had before. The phrase, 'dictatorship of the proletariat' is commonly used to express their ambition, but it seems to me harsh. As a matter of fact, the percantage of those in Russia other than workingmen is small. But what the Bolsheviki propose and are now enforcing is, in fact, a class Government, and not a republic. It is a Government of the workers for the workers.

"Inequality is the distinguishing note of primitive society and equality the note of modern civilization. To the Bolsheviki equality theoretically means the total eradication of class lines; but in a larger sense they admit such a proposition is paradoxical because equality does not exist as a natural force, and the State can promise nothing more than equality of opportunity. Certainly they have not attempted the eradication of class lines. They have fanned class hatreds.

"But Russia must be saved. She must be saved from Germany, at any cost, and from continued civil war. As long as intolerance and violence rage there, Russia plays into Germany's hands. It is unnecessary to repeat here the facts of the impending German commercial penetration and domination. The facts should be well enough known by now in this country. The main thing is to find some way of salvaging Russia. That could be done, I believe, if a truce could be patched up between her warring factions.

"If a political truce were declared, the Allies would send supplies and other help into the crippled country, and the Russian armies now active in Siberia could form the nucleus of a new army, an army to liberate Russia from its own intolerance. During such a truce Russia must have a temporary Government, in which all parties must have a voice, but effective only during the transition period. As soon as the Russian people had drawn up a Constitution and elected officers that temporary Government should make way for them. It is obvious that in time the people of Russia must be allowed to choose their own form of government.

"Let us not forget that it took America six years to frame a Constitution which would hold water. Such States as Connecticut and Massachusetts did not enter the Union without a lot of coaxing and political engineering. Let us also bear in mind that the States in their period of reconstruction were a homogeneous people, while Russia has seventeen different nationalities, speaking seventeen tongues and animated by many different motives and interests.

"The United States of Russia (call it what you please) can only come into being through the will of the Russian people themselves, aided by education and democratic ideals. The price they have paid has been high, but liberty is always costly. The United States of America paid a high price in sweat and blood and tears for its freedom. This nation, it seems to me, is obligated in many ways to lend a hand to Russia."

Getting the Army Habit of Self-Sacrifice

It Became Just as Natural as Saluting, One Soldier Wrote Home to His Father---The War as a Teacher of Physical Endurance to Our Men

The following is from one of many thousands of letters received by American fathers from their boys on the other side, written on "Fathers' Day." It is from a First Sergeant who spent his twenty-first birthday in the trenches this year. The father is a prominent professional man of New York City, and another son is a First Lieutenant.

HAVING given you a slight idea of where I have been and what I have been doing, I want to try and give you an equally rough sketch of what it [the war] has done to me.

Primarily it has opened our eyes in regard to the adaptability of the human body and its almost unlimited endurance in the face of strain and hardships. For example, one night our outfit, in heavy marching order, carrying ammunition which brought the total of each man's burden close to 100 pounds, had to cover twenty-eight miles, steady marching, a feat which before the war we all would have classed as beyond physical endurance. However, we all staggered in at the finish, walking like men in their sleep, weaving from one side of the road to the other, and with the totally exhausted being supported by those more able.

Moreover, it has made many men more religious, though that is not just the word I want to use there. What I mean is that this life has given many opportunities for little acts of kindness and self-sacrifice, (that is the word I should have used, self-sacrifice.) It has been interesting to see how at first many men were rather ashamed to be caught doing something kind, or giving up something in return for the happiness of generosity. Later, however, the principle of sharing everything with the other fellow became as habitual and binding as the custom of saluting officers; really became instinctive. As for religion in itself, a'l I can say is that no man can go through one battle, with its ever-occurring miracles of courage and self-abnegation, where one juggles with death at every step, without coming back with an ironbound faith in Divine Guidance.

Lastly, every man Jack of us has given more time to serious thought than we ever did before in our lives. For a little instance, let me tell you that last night I listened to two men in bunks near mine, one of them an uneducated Russian from the Ukraine, and the other an illiterate coal-wagon driver from Philadelphia, discussing the underlying principles of this war, and trying to see why it was necessary for so-called civilized nations to take up arms against one another. Although I could have improved upon their diction and grammar, I was ashamed to admit that they were going deeper into many questions than I had ever done, and were showing that they had worked out philosophies of life to a much finer point than I had ever attempted.

Many of us have had an opportunity to focus our mental lens, newly clarified by our experiences over here, on our lives "befo' the war," and have been rendered capable of seeing that some of our ideas and ideals were wrong, and I feel safe in saying that more "good resolutions" have been formed by Americans in France since the war started than were made on all the New Year's Days of the past ten years. There is one salient difference, though, and that is that the proportion of these resolutions which is carried out is going to be far greater than the proverbial New Year's ones. Therefore, taking it all in all, I feel safe in saying that I expect you will find me greatly changed when you next see me. Not physically, for outside of a couple of scars and a pair of frosted ears I bear no physical signs of my trip, but mentally, for I believe I will have shed a little of the queerness with which I did most of my thinking and feeling, and have become just a normal, ordinary creature, giving a little more thought to things worth while, and pitching into life with a little more definite aim.

No doubt you will have some sort of a [Christmas] celebration, though nothing like the old ones of Seventy-sixth Street. However, please present my greetings to any of my friends with whom you happen to be on that day. You will probably see M., Mr. B., Uncle W., and others that I know, so just tell them that I will be holding a mental Xmas party over here, at which they will all be present.

Take care of yourself, Dad, and don't be surprised to see me walk in most any day, for we are living for the time when our particular unit will start home. It may be only a month, or it may be six months or a year, but in any case it will be time well spent. Yours, S.

Central Part of the City of Berlin, Where Most of the Recent Bitter Fighting Between the Ebert Government Forces and the Spartacide Rebels Has Occurred. It Includes the Principal Public Buildings, Famous Thoroughfares, Business Houses, and Newspaper Offices of the German Capital.

When Revolution Stalks Streets of Berlin

Tourist Landmarks Converted Into Fortresses, and Battered with Heavy Guns, as Spartacides, in Armed Revolt, Attempt the Overthrow of the Ebert Régime

WHEN Germans wreathed their returning soldiers with laurel, accounting them victorious because the Fatherland had been spared the ravishment of war, they did not realize that revolution was yet to audit the books with a red pencil. Many of the chief buildings in Berlin and some in other cities are mutilated now, and the soldiers they crowned have manned the heavy guns which helped demolish former tourist landmarks. The Brandenburg Gate became a fortress, and on top of structures scattered through the capital grenade squads and flame throwers have been at work.

Berlin has been most ravaged by the factions, and the map herewith shows the central portion of the city, where much of the fighting has occurred. It began on Jan. 6 in the Wilhelmplatz, where there was a sanguinary conflict, from 6 o'clock until 9 in the evening, between the Government troops and the Spartacides; and it spread to the newspaper quarter and other districts, with the telegraph offices and Police Headquarters as centres of battle.

The Central Telegraph Office is in Oranienburgerstrasse, and Police Headquarters in the Alexanderplatz. The deposing of Chief of Police Eichhorn, the last representative in a position of power of the revolutionary faction, apparently precipitated the bloodshed. When the night of Jan. 6 came, the Wilhelmplatz, on which stands the Chancellor's palace, was strewn with dead and wounded. On that same day Liebknecht led a mob against the Vorwärts building, later to become the scene of prolonged and destructive fighting, and Ledebour led another against the Wolff Bureau, the official news agency of the former empire.

Vorwärts, a Socialist newspaper, was so mild as to be almost as unsatisfactory a publication to the revolutionists as the Wolff Bureau itself, and after they gained possession of the building they issued it in a new form, called "The Red Vorwärts." Armed Spartacides paraded Unter den Linden and the Brandenburgerstrasse to the Chancellor's Palace and the Tiergarten, and when they encountered Government forces engaged in affrays with them. The Hotel Adlon, where American officers of the prisoner and food commission were stopping, seems to have averted assault by hoisting the Stars and Stripes.

Government machine-gun troops were stationed the next day atop the Brandenburg Gate and troops equipped with flame throwers occupied posts near by. A recruiting office was opened in the palace of Prince Leopold, opposite the Chancellor's palace. Liebknecht's men assembled at the Siegesallee, and when groups of the opponents met, frequently there were fights, such as that at the corner of the Leipzigerstrasse and Wilhelmstrasse. The encounters waxed more bitter on the following day in many quarters of Berlin, and were especially violent in the newspaper district. The Wolff Bureau, Tageblatt, Vorwärts, and the publishing houses of Scherl, Morse, and Ullstein all had been seized by the Spartacides and were subjected to simultaneous attack by the Government forces. About the Tageblatt building on Schützenstrasse and the Wolff Bureau on Charlottenstrasse the fighting was fiercest. Hand grenades and machine guns were used.

A large building near the royal stables (still so-called even under the Ebert régime) was used as an arsenal, where fresh recruits to the Spartacide ranks were armed. Faring forth, some of these men joined the pitched battle raging between the Herrenhaus and Wertheim's department store. Other Spartacides broke into the War Office, but were ejected. At the corner of Unter den Linden and Friedrichstrasse there was an affray between Spartacides and "Scheidemen," as they called the Government soldiers.

The Spartacides converted the buildings of Vorwärts, the Tageblatt, the Vossische Zeitung, Lokal-Anzeiger, and the Wolff Bureau into formidable fortresses. Government forces made the Dönhofplatz a base of attack on the Tageblatt building, and the Belleallianceplatz an artillery base against Vorwärts, which is No. 3 of the Lindenstrasse. After the defenders of Vorwärts had sent forth an emissary under a white flag to treat unsuccessfully for their liberty if they evacuated, the Government troops blew down the whole front of the building and captured it. After days of fighting the Spartacides also surrendered the Beauxenstein printing works.

Artillery was posted on the roof of the Patent Office, facing the canal near the Lindenstrasse. From shelter behind the Trinity Church Spartacides rushed forth and broke through the line of Government soldiers guarding the Kaiserhof, to open counterfire on the Patent Office battery.

Asserting that the Spartacides had executed seven Government soldiers, the Schiedemann forces, according to wireless report, began to undertake reprisals, and the revolution assumed the gravest aspects of the terrorism Petrograd had been witnessing. But it began to appear early last week that the force of the revolution had been broken. The Government announced the capture of Police Headquarters and of Boestow's brewery, both of which had been fortified and strongly held by the Spartacides. Liebknecht and Eichhorn were reported in hiding.

Police Headquarters was bombarded with seven-centimeter guns from neighboring buildings south of the Alexanderplatz. Some of the guns were taken over the Stadtbahn, or City Railway. The Spartacide machine guns were put out of commission and the building almost reduced to ruins.

When defeat of the revolutionary movement seemed certain, Spartacide troops began looting. Armored cars made foray expeditions to Junker estates and returned abundantly laden with hams, eggs, and poultry. Chief of Police Richter, successor to Eichhorn, announced that the small arms of his force, which had been taken away by Eichhorn, should be restored, to check the freebooters.

There was need for some such measure. In Frankfurterstrasse the Spartacides robbed a branch of the Disconto Bank of 100,000 marks, (normally about $25,000.) A squad in an armored car looted a department store of goods and about 50,000 marks. At a dance hall much frequented by profiteers they made an armed midnight raid which brought them much in money and jewels. But the fact that the revolution had reached this stage of felony indicated to Berlin observers that it was at its conclusion.

Cheerful Australians

AUSTRALIANS are furious fighters, who have given proof of their mettle in countless thrashings administered to the Germans, but they are also, like many other high-spirited men in other parts of the world, averse to control and inclined to be restive under discipline. Numerous stories of unruliness and flippancy toward superiors among Australian soldiers have drifted across the Atlantic. Here is one told in a letter by R. G. Russom, formerly of THE NEW YORK TIMES Art Department, now a private in the Australian forces in England:

"Yesterday on parade the officer numbered us off. The first man said 'one,' the second 'two,' the third 'three,' but when it got to 'ten' the next man said 'jack,' the next 'queen,' the two next said 'king' and 'ace.' The officer stopped the numbering and said: 'Fall out, the court cards!'

"That broke up the parade."

WAR TRADE BOARD'S PART IN THE WAR

Enemy Industry Crippled at Home as Well as in Foreign Lands, Propaganda Scotched, Food Restricted, While American Shipping and Commerce Were Stimulated

By LEONARD HATCH.

WHEN Uncle Sam went into the war it was with "both feet." Not only should military campaigns be waged against the enemy, but economic warfare, too, and both with the same relentlessness, the same intelligence, the same vigor. How splendidly the military triumphed is familiar to all. How successfully the economic campaigns ended is still to be told and best told through the work of a Government organization, large in numbers, vital in function, wonderful in results, and inconspicuous in print—the War Trade Board.

When German war factories lacked steel-hardening materials for shells; when German firms shut up shop in South America; when Pershing's men obtained saddles and mules from Spain; when we and our allies received lumber from Switzerland and iron ore from Scandinavia; when "movies" spreading German propaganda were banished from the theatres of neutrals; when German trade with contiguous neutrals was virtually cut off; when hidden German-owned property was revealed in this country and its possessions, and when hundreds of thousands of ship tonnage were diverted to meet the requirements of the Yanks overseas, the trail of responsibility leads directly to the War Trade Board.

German firms outside of Germany, notably in Spain, South America, Mexico, Central America, and elsewhere, were piling up undisturbed fortunes in business with which they spread propaganda against the Allies or conserved for after-war purposes in re-establishing German credit and commercial power. In fact, Germany was so little hampered that the hope of starving her into submission had vanished.

America recognized these facts as she joined the Allies. It became evident that sterner measures were required to win. It was patent that the essential war materials of the world must be conserved for ourselves and the Allies, that new policies toward neutrals must be established. From the first there was the heartiest kind of co-operation between America and its allies.

By virtue of the Espionage act of June 15, 1917, the Exports Council was created by Presidential proclamation to meet the conditions of that time. A month later there was issued the first list of restricted exports for which licenses must be obtained. Aug. 27, 1917, the list was extended and an Exports Administrative Board was established. The Trading with the Enemy act was enacted Oct. 6, 1917, which gave power over imports as well, and Oct. 12 the War Trade Board came into being. Three days later it issued its first order.

At once the board declared intensive economic warfare on the enemy. All essential war materials here or abroad must be conserved for ourselves and our allies. All imports must be controlled to conserve ships for the business of the war. If the United States was to supply the allied and neutral world with foodstuffs, a rationing system must be adopted. Through the control of exports and imports, ships must be diverted from normal trade to war routes. Sugar must be brought from Cuba; wool from the Argentine; nitrates from Chile. These were war necessities, and tonnage must be switched from other to transatlantic routes to meet the necessities of war.

The War Trade Board resolved itself into the biggest export and import business in the history of the world. It put virtually the world's shipping into its own hands. It meant that every export and every import touching this country and its war associates, and, by virtue of bunker licensing every neutral, required a permit to be moved. It involved daily transactions running from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000. It required the service of 3,000 employes, mostly in Washington, but also in every importing trading post in the world. It stood as the clearing house of world trade and the "contact" for the State, Treasury, War, Navy, Shipping, War Industries, Food, and other Government departments. It was the focal point of trade agencies of the earth.

Branches of allied embassies had their offices in the board's building. Ambassadors, Ministers, Consuls, high commissions of neutrals were its frequent conferees and visitors. The world trade dreams of kultur were but nightmares compared with this necessary war-period actuality.

To prevent supplies from reaching Germany was an obvious necessity and little less so the crippling of what little trade she had. Through the splendid blockage of the British and allied navies virtually no supplies reached Germany directly from overseas. What entered Germany came from contiguous and the so-called northern neutrals across the Baltic, whose waters were safe from allied patrol. Yet this undisturbed flow of supplies was too vital to neglect, even though difficult.

Humanity dictated that America provide the neutrals with the absolute essentials of life. To the neutrals America said, "we will ascertain exactly just what your living needs are and we will provide those things in so far as we are able. We will not do it if Germany is to profit directly or indirectly. We will not give you oil for your factories to make war supplies for Germany. We will not send you oil cakes to put into your cattle to make butter and milk and cheese for our enemy. In return we ask that you put at our disposal such shipping as is now lying idle or engaged in non-essential trade and provide us with what commodities you can spare."

What the United States and its allies really did was to offer these neutrals a better proposition than Germany could. It was a system of bargaining, and the neutrals accepted the better offer.

The War Trade Board negotiated agreements with Denmark, Switzerland, Sweden, and Norway, made progress with Holland, whom Germany had by the throat, and consummated a commercial bond with Spain. The result was that these neutrals cut off Germany completely in some materials and in all others cut down their former exports.

The agreement with Switzerland was made Dec. 5, 1917, to run from Oct. 1 that year to Sept. 30, 1918. Agreements made at various times during 1917 with Norway, Sweden, and Denmark ran for the duration of the war. As illustrating the effect on Germany of just one of these agreements, the following table is illuminating:

Oatmeal	187,391	0
Flour	63,933	0
Dried fruits	127,866	0
Raw hides	127,866	0
Cotton cloth	1,183,870	68,342

Switzerland agreed further to send no milk, edible fats or poultry to Germany. Norway cut its normal fish exports of hundreds of thousands of tons to 48,000 and exported no fish oil or other foodstuffs. Sweden's trade with Germany in foodstuffs was limited to cranberries. Denmark, solely dependent on Germany for coal, held its exports of butter, bacon, cheese, eggs to only a fraction of the amounts sent previous to the War Trade Board's agreement, and for every pound of foodstuffs Denmark sent Germany she sent a like amount to England. Germany did not receive a pound of cotton from these sources.

The agreements worked out the same way in respect of other than foodstuffs. Scandinavia and Switzerland ordinarily sent large quantities of metals and minerals to Germany for munitions. This stopped. In some cases not a single pound was shipped. Norway agreed to send Germany 200 tons of copper annually, but Germany had to return a like amount in manufactured articles. Of such essential war materials as bismuth, nickel, chrome, and manganese, Norway sent no more to Germany.

Germany not only lost these prized war commodities for herself, but she lost them to the Allies, for when the neutrals ceased to market them with Germany they sent them to Germany's enemies because Germany's enemies were keeping them alive. And so not only were the Germans tightening their belts for lack of food, but their war industries were beginning to starve.

An agreement along similar lines was in process of negotiation with Holland when the armistice was signed. That it was not signed along with the other neutrals was due to the pistol which Germany held at Holland's head and the threat of invasion. Holland was too close to Belgium to risk that.

In rationing neutrals the board took safeguards to prevent our supplies from leaking through neutral nations to the enemy. This was accomplished by the organization of distributing agencies and under interallied committee supervision. Violation, of course, meant rupture with America and the Allies, and, in Denmark, the Danish Merchants' Guild; in Holland, the Netherlands Overseas Trust, and in Switzerland the Société Suisse de Surveillance Economique were scrupulous in sealing their frontiers tightly.

Another advantageous arrangement was made by the board with Spain by which General Pershing's legions and our allied armies received supplies. Spain needed our oils and other commodities. Our soldiers needed military supplies. The bargainers of the War Trade Board and the American Expeditionary Forces got busy, and Spain provided under an agreement of March 7, 1918, about 500,000 army blankets; 50,000 mules, 240,000 yards of canvas, 20,000 saddles and bridles, 100,000 pounds of harness leather, and other supplies.

Scarcity of tonnage required a strict rationing of ships by neutrals, the Allies, and ourselves. One of the most effective weapons designed to dominate the situation was the control of all bunker fuel through license for every ship touching American ports, continental or insular. Every ship of neutral or allied ownership had to be licensed if it wanted bunkers. As a consequence, the board could govern both voyage and cargo. If, in the board's opinion, the length of the voyage or the character of cargo was detrimental to the winning of the war, it refused ship fuel, until the skipper or owner agreed to those things which did help us win the war.

Guerno Hermanos of Mazatlan, Mexico, for example, was suspected of pro-German activities. He bought a racing yacht and took it to Los Angeles to be fitted with new machinery. When he went to clear port he was refused fuel unless he agreed to return to Los Angeles. He refused, and the racing yacht was left rusting in Los Angeles, and German commerce raiders did not profit thereby.

Similar methods kept in port a flotilla of small vessels operating off Florida and strongly suspected of supplying enemy submarines with gasoline and other supplies.

Relentless as was the board's effort to keep supplies from reaching Germany, just as relentless was the campaign to cripple her trade, to smash her foreign business, and to prevent her from recouping abroad her losses at home. This vital work was intrusted to the War ing a rare quality of beauty. To pass from the exquisite painting of a blue jay stretched lifeless on the ground to the warm, sparkling gayety of the "Edge of the Mill Pond" is to realize the breadth of Twachtman's sympathies with the world of nature. The exhibition will be open until Jan. 29.

American Sculptures.

The word American covers so many varieties of mind and temperament, education, talent, and character, that to attach it to any collection of painting or sculpture can mean only "not imported." At the Bourgeois Galleries is a collection of "American Sculptures" by men and women who have, whatever they lack, a common hatred of academic standards. In style they differ conspicuously. The energetic linear arabesques of Hunt Diederich, suggesting as little as possible the third dimension, are at the opposite pole from the compact forms of Cecil B. Howard upon whom primitive Greece has laid a restraining hand, and from the less nervous and fleshier bulk of the figures by Florence G. Lucius. Stirling Calder's athletic forms contrast startlingly with the long, loose spiral of the wood carving "Flames," by Robert Laurent. Gaston Lachaise grafts upon primitive unity and simplicity the Parisian branch of rich sophistication. Arthur Lee makes his "Gerda" a natural childish creature to whom one turns with a sense of getting within the pleasant bounds of plain life, and the splendidly modeled animals by Grace M. Johnson have the same effect upon one type of American mind.

The drawings by the sculptors are admirable performances, showing the command a sculptor has over line and the degree of his interest in movement. The exhibition lasts through the month.

Hand-Decorated Textiles Exhibited by the Art Alliance of America.

The third exhibition of hand-decorated textiles is now being hung in the galleries of the Art Alliance of America, where it will be open to the public from Jan. 16 to Jan. 31.

Prizes totaling $750 have just been awarded in the competition which was organized by Albert Blum: For the most beautiful textile for costmue, two prizes of $50 each to Jack Singer and Hazel Burnham Slaughter; for the most beautiful fabric for interior decoration, $100 and $50, to Genevieve Jewett and Helen C. Reed; for the best ribbons, $75 and $25, to Mary Meigs Atwater and Josephine M. Weil; for the most beautiful fabric for negligee, $50, to Ruth Reeves Olds; for the most beautiful flat color typifying the spirit of the moment, $100 and $50, to Paul Jacob-Hians and Mary H. Tannahill; for pictur batik, $50, to Elsie Carpell; for wool embroidery, $25 for a pair of curtains designed by Margaret Prager and executed by Miss Jamjan; for a batik scarf, $25, to Isabel Cooper; for a batik table cover, $25, to Ella P. Speer; for hooked stool top, $25, to Ruth E. Brand, a pupil of the Girls' High School in Brooklyn; for hooked pillow top, $25, to Mrs. Eleanor G. Swan; for batik hanging, $25, to Hugo E. Robus; honorable mentions for their work as a whole to Mary Meigs Atwater, weaving; Helen C. Reed, tyed dyeing, and Josephine M. Weil, woven ribbons.

The first prize awarded for color went to a rich red dyed by Paul Jacob-Hians, which combines the red battle note with the blue of the sky, the vision of the ideal, this combination being the key-note of America's position in the war. The second prize went to a flame color, dyed by Mary H. Tannahill, the flame of democracy consuming autocracy. This victory color is the result of the yellow service star symbolizing those who have served and passed away, and the red star, the symbol of those who served and are here.

The jury that awarded these prizes consisted of: W. G. Burt, M. D. C. Crawford, Edward L. Mayer, Max Meyer, J. A. Migel, Miss Jesse Franklin Turner; and Miss Wolhelmine R. de Richey, of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Washington, D. C.

Exhibition of 18th Century French Art

Portrait by Nattier, Lent by James Speyer to Loan Exhibition of Eighteenth Century Art, at the Museum of French Art.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY art has kept its ingratiating charm for the American collector in spite of a growing taste for Gothic, loyal preferences for Colonial styles, and brave adventures into minor periods with their independent charms. The fine loan exhibition at the galleries of the Museum of French Art dedicated to the reigns of Louis Quinze and Louis Seize is rich in the historical and familiar associations of those industriously decorative periods.

One hardly knows which to admire most in the art of the time: the astounding industry of the skillful fastidious workmen or their well-night impeccable sense of decorative effect. Their fervor in producing the beautiful objects commanded for Queen or Marquise made each of them, if not a masterpiece, at least the work of a master in his field.

Most of the things shown in the museum exhibition have been either in this country since the French Revolution or found by art lovers in unfrequented parts of France and shown here for the first time publicly. One of the features of the gallery is a marble mantelpiece of the Louis Quinze period, lent by Miss Diane del Monte. The warm flushed tone of the marble forms a pleasant contrast with the black statuette of Louis Quinze belonging to Mrs. William A. Clark. The furniture includes a beautiful little tambour table in marquetry, lent by Albert Blum, the decoration of doves and musical emblems of the most exquisite workmanship and the whole expressing the perfect mingling of taste with craftsmanship characteristic of the finest pieces of the transition period.

A small fauteuil with a frame of carved and painted wood is covered with petit point made by the Marquise de Lafayette for Mrs. John Jay when John Jay was in Paris in 1783 for the purpose of signing the Treaty of Paris. It is lent by Banyer Clarkson, Esq. The close precise work reminds us of the great industry practised not only by the French craftsmen but by the charming ladies for whom they toiled in that incredibly active eighteenth century when the Pompadour did tapestry and Marie Antoinette embroidered screens.

Other furniture comes from the collections of Mrs. S. Reading Bertron, Mrs. C. A. Spreckels, Mrs. James W. Lane, Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Stanford White, Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, Mitchell Samuels, Thomas Hughes Kelly, Mrs. Adolf Ladenburg, Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. John A Logan, Mrs. John King Van Rensselaer, Mrs. George J. Whelan, and Richard Codman.

Delightful statuettes in soft paste Sèvres from models by Boucher and with all that artist's coquetry and daintiness are lent by Mrs. A. J. Drexel Biddle, Jr. Mrs. William P. Douglas lends an amazing collection of seals in various forms of the two periods, in soft paste and enamels, marvels of opulent design and fragile material. The bibelots; étuis and nécessaires, vinaigrettes, and snuff-boxes and surtouts de table, emphasize even more than the serious furnishings how far from flippant was the spirit of the century when it came to the work of one's hands. Trivial the ouject might be, the craftsmanship was other than trivial, and that is what justifies our twentieth century interest in these old precious things and points for us a moral clearly discernible in that immoral age.

The exhibition also includes books from the J. Pierpont Morgan collection, fans, jewelry, laces and embroidery, silver, terra cottas, miniatures, paintings, wood carvings, all the forms into which art flowed so easily and gracefully before the French Revolution cut off the heads of its patrons.

The objects are drawn from the collections already mentioned and those of W. R. Britton, Miss Shippen, Mrs. James Sullivan Bowdoin, Thomas Hughes Kelly, Mrs. John Woodruff Simpson, Mrs. A. Murray Young, Mrs. George J. Whelan, De Witt Clinton Cohen, Mrs. Charles Berg, Ogden Codman, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Markoe, Mrs. John C. Wilmerding, Thomas Pearsall Thorne, Miss Margaret B. Gould, Mrs. Orme Wilson, James Speyer, Mrs. MacDougall Hawkes, Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, Franklin Haven Sargent, Mrs. F. Gray Griswold, among others, and from the possessions of the museum, with a few pieces of unusual character from houses specializing in this period. The exhibition lasts until the 28th of the month.

Ricardo Canals.

Canals is a Spanish painter who finds his subjects in the street processions, the fairs, the café-concerts, the bull-fights, and the workrooms of the cigarette makers in Seville. His pictures at the Durand Ruel Galleries bring the warm Andalusian atmosphere into the environment of a New York Winter, and the contrast emphasizes the somewhat feverish palette, but the color, deep stainings of yellow and crimson and acid green, seems to express the mood of the pictures, the light-hearted, hedonistic mood of the people themselves. The costumes are vivid, the gestures are violently gay, throngs of peasure-seekers are seeking amusement indoors and out, dancers are following wild rhythms with the grace of Southern Spain, and even the workers are animated and cheerful.

The artist is happier with the pastel medium than with oil color. His pastels have every whit as much force as his oils and a greater authority of handling, with, naturally, fresher color and a lighter touch. The finest is perhaps the rugged little "Espagnole à l'eventail," in which the usual insipid suavity of the chalk plays no part. Among the oil paintings the "Bal Champêtre" with its hints of Watteau in a more robust idiom is altogether the most sustained in its aesthetic appeal. There are not only delightful passages of color in the various episodes of the composition, there is also a unity and an integrity of color that communicates the sentiment of the scene. The figures are spontaneous in gesture and the drawing is vigorous. There is something of idealism added to the realism of the artist's habitual style, but it only serves to enhance the impression of life.

Paintings by John Folinsbee.

Mr. Folinsbee, whose recent paintings are on view at the Ferargil Galleries, is cheerfully responsive to the enlivening effect of sunlight pouring down on garden beds of flowers in bloom and on the blonde head of a little human flower still in bud. His "In the Garden" is one of the pleasantest canvases in the exhibition, although the figure of the child is somewhat lacking in solidity in comparison wth the cluster of hollyhocks at the left. His "Beth" is another figure subject, a portrait of the same child holding a toy elephant in her arms. The artist has succeeded admirably in keeping the suggestion of childish charm without going into detail about it.

The landscapes are more familiar to Mr. Folinsbee's public and include some of his most serious work. "Autumn Gaiety," "Winter Afternoon," and "White House in Sunlight" show in full degree the material richness and the light, firm design characteristic of his later paintings.

"At Daybreak" is notable for the way in which the long curve of the river bank is broken in the foreground without sacrificing its beauty, and for the happy grouping of the houses on the bank to repeat without monotony its general direction, building up unconventional rhythms of great charm.

The exhibiton lasts through the month.

Chelminski's War Portraits.

Jan V. Chelminski was born in Warsaw in 1851, and studied in Warsaw and later in Munich, taking part for several years in the Bavarian Army manoeuvres in order to study military life at close range. Sporting and military subjects were his preference from the outset of his career, and in 1884, while in America he illustrated Roosevelt's "Cross Country" for the Century Magazine. He went to London in 1888, and during his eight years' stay there he became a British subject. After a visit to Russia in 1890 he devoted himself exclusively to military subjects, painting innumerable episodes of the Napoleonic epoch and making an exhaustive study of the army of the Duchy of Warsaw, spending several years in reconstructing with his brush the Polish Army, "younger sister of that of France." He produced forty-eight little pictures representing the ensemble of that army and nearly 112 uniforms of the Polish troops, and, getting his friend, Commandant A. Malibran, to collaborate with him by writing the history of the army, he recently published the whole work, history and illustrations, under the title "The Army of the Duchy of Warsaw, 1807-1815."

Thus Chelminski brings to war subjects a closely trained mind, and whatever you may think of his charming little paintings as art you cannot fail to respect their studious accuracy.

At the Kleinberger Galleries there is now an exhibition of four pictures by him commemorating the leading army officers of the present war. In one he shows Marshal Joffre, ruddy and robust, accompanied by Generals Pau de Castelnau, Franchet d'Esperey, and Marshal Pétain. Marshal Foch is accompanied by Generals Maxime Wiegand, Humbert, Degoutte, Gouraud, and Mangin. Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig is accompanied by Generals Sir Henry Rawlinson, Sir Herbert Plumer, Sir Henry Horne, and Sir Julian Byng, and General Pershing is accompanied by Generals March, Burland, Bliss, Liggett, and Dickman.

In these portraits, in spite of their minute detail, the feeling of open-air is given and the painting of the horses on which the illustrious officers are mounted is admirable. Other paintings by Chelminski are in the exhibition, but none shows his scrupulous method to better advantage. They may be seen throughout the present month.

Paintings by John H. Twachtman.

The words of an artist about an artist are always criticism of a kind to heed, and Childe Hassam in his introduction to the paintings by John H. Twachtman, now on view at the Macbeth Galleries, tells simple truth as painters know it. He speaks of the delicacy and evanescence of Twachtman's work as a matter of common knowledge, but he places his stress on the manly strength of the design which some of us may not have noticed. It is a man's work, he says: "You feel the virile line. It is in his clouds and tree forms, in his stone walls and waterfalls, in his New England hillsides, and in the snow clinging to the roof of an old barn or edging the hemlock pool. His use of line was rhythmic and the movements are always graceful." In making these two points, emphasizing the strength and grace of Twachtman's work, Mr. Hassam reminds us of what we always should remember and almost uniformly forget, that grace and rhythm imply strength. It still is a common bit of foolishness to think of work that is sensitive and graceful as lacking in strength and of work that is coarse and ugly as possessing it. Mr. Hassam sums it up for us in the genuine Greek spirit when he says: "A noble and expressive line, with a joyous feeling for nature, a frank and manly directness in presenting truths, by painting, however poetic and fleeting, must give value and distinction to any work in paint—or in any other medium in which we express ourselves in what is called art."

To see the pictures in company with this commentary by a painter intimately qualified to appreciate the merits of this particular kind of art is to see them under the most favorable conditions possible. Under any conditions, however, they must impress the observer as having Trade Intelligence, best known as "W. T. I.," directed by Paul Fuller of New York, a distinguished lawyer.

If enemy trade was to be stopped, the board had to know the identity of foreign traders, their affiliations and their "cloaks" throughout the world. If a cargo of agricultural implements was to be licensed for export, the character of both consignor and consignee must be known. If either had German origin or connection, the license was refused. It was the business of "W. T. I." to "get the goods" and determine the enemy or non-enemy character of the parties to an export or import transaction, a process in which our allies played a substantial part.

In December of 1917 the Board, just getting under way really, had information on 8 per cent. of the persons named in the license applications. Today the percentage is 80. There are on file about 360,000 information cards bearing on 165,000 firms and individuals throughout the world. To obtain this information 67,000 special reports were made by agents of the board scattered all over the globe and working in harmony with agents of other departments and other Governments.

The size of the job facing the Intelligence Bureau is indicated by the fact that from Jan. 1, 1918, to the signing of the armistice it passed upon more than 2,000,000 applications, ranging from 7,000 to 10,000 a day, and with an average valuation of $3,500. In August, 1918, alone, there were 127,845 applications.

All enemy traders were placed on one of three "black" lists. A place on any one of these was a trade death warrant Neither neutral nor ally would deal w the branded name. One list, the enemy trading list, was public, and included al whose enemy standing was patent. Another, the confidential suspect list, explains itself, and a third, the "cloaks' list," included those "straw men" who acted for enemy traders.

In South America, Mexico, and Central America all the disguises of old Castilian names and Spanish accent and mannerisms, which the German had adopted, were penetrated by "W. T. I." and "to let" and "for sale" signs now hang all over the establishments.

The German house of Hasenclever, the big distributer of agricultural machinery on the east coast of South America, is out of business—forced to sell to American interests. Hasenclever, once on the blacklist, was a commercial outcast. He could deal with none. None dealt with him. In Chile the nitrate interests were in German hands. The United States through its control of fuel oil ousted the Germans. In Peru, the great Gildemeister. sugar interests are no longer Gildemeister. Put on the enemy trading list, they became traders without trade and had to renounce their control. With the consent of America and to protect the 10,000 employes the Peruvian Government took over the German concern.

The Casa Grande Sugar Company of Peru, the largest electric power company in Brazil, and three great banks in that section, all dominated by Germans, closed up. The "blacklist" branded them.

That sort of German trade suppression took place all over the world, because of the sleepless vigil of "W. T. I". Even the German movies in neutral nations did not escape the farflung arm. This was accomplished again through the control of exports. South American "movie" managers, wanting American and Italian films, were told they could not obtain license for export if their theatres showed German pictures, all of them, of course, propaganda. The "movie" theatres had to have our own and other pictures because even the congenital pro-German cannot spend evening after evening looking at just German pictures. The "movie" men saw the point and banned the German moving-picture propaganda.

When not turning up enemy traders War Trade Intelligence was revealing enemy-owned property to the Alien Property Custodian. A letter from an Austrian in an Austrian officers' training camp to a friend in this country was intercepted. It asked for $15,000 for spending money. That was the clue. It led to the uncovering of $400,000 worth of Austrian property in this country which was turned over to the Alien Property Custodian.

Perhaps no function of the board was richer in results than its diversion of ship tonnage to meet war needs. It was necessary to control our own and allied tonnage, but the war crisis demanded still more ships. The neutrals had some of them. They must be obtained by bargaining or diversion. It was up to the War Trade Board.

In September and October alone, due to control of imports and exports, the board was able to divert from trade to war purposes 1,200,000 tons of shipping, in addition to smaller quantities obtained in similar fashion before that.

By the control of bunkers it was easy for the board to persuade neutrals that if they wanted coal they could get it by engaging in some useful maritime pursuit. An equally fascinating offer was to place certain much-needed commodities at the disposal of the neutrals if they would put ship tonnage at our disposal. And so again the bargain was struck.

In this fashion the War Trade Board obtained from Norway 154 vessels of 607,544 tons; from Sweden, 67 vessels of 200,000 tons; from Denmark, 53 vessels of 265,000 tons. Holland, under an uprised German club, hesitated. She was offered wheat if she would come for it. Still the German threat persisted, so 484,053 tons of shipping lying idle in American ports were acquired under international law by executive order under pledge of fair compensation and full return.

Japan also had considerable tonnage and shipbuilding facilities, too. She needed steel ship plates badly. America had the steel ship plates, but steel was a war essential and had to be conserved. But the United States could afford to export the plates for ships, so Japan turned over and contracted for 522,908 tons.

This process added more than two million tons to our shipping resources, making possible an uninterrupted flow of war supplies to the fighting line and of war materials to the munition factories in our own and allied lands.

While these restrictions forced radical changes in private business, it is the statement of members of the board that American trade promptly approved the policies and submitted patriotically to the sacrifices.

In the War Trade uilding, covering an entire Washington block, are one and one-half miles of hallways, 300,000 square feet of floor space, 300 separate officer. Distances are so great that a corps of twenty-five boys use roller skates to deliver messages, and make 1,800 calls daily. It has its own mail service, which handles 4,000 to 5,000 communications a day, with a delivery and collection every twenty minutes.

There are 372 main telephones and 161 extensions. To provide the buzzer system required 250 miles of wire. There are 500 electric fans, 1,000 typewriters, a print shop with 3,000,000 impressions a month. A mailing list to exporters, importers, newspapers, and others number 20,000. In 1918 thus far 13,000,000 envelopes were used.

German munition factories were so hard pressed for copper, cotton, and other raw materials for shellmaking in the later days of the war that church bells, door knobs, even the guns of their craven navy, were being melted down to make munitions for the hard-pressed German military machine. The embargo and the blockade and the agreements engineered by the War Trade Board with neutrals were getting in their fine work. The proportion of "duds," dead shells on the battlefield, was increasing.

When the embargo cut off fodder supplies to Germany, and restricted foodstuffs to neutrals, it was felt shortly in the horse transport service of the enemy. Germany had done wonders with motors, but when America cut off its supplies of rubber, these noiseless tires gave way to clanging iron bands. Consequently motor trucks, thus equipped, carrying supplies, had to withdraw from front-line service and horses substituted. But the horses, scantily fed, lacked pulling power, and shells and food for the fighters began arriving later and later.

Nor was this the only way the War Trade Board attacked the German Army from the rear. The enemy was getting ammunition in reduced quantity and quality. Not only had the board prevented steel-hardening materials from getting into Germany, but the food supplies for the munition workers were getting so shabby that they failed to produce the energy which would produce the munitions in former quantities. The workers' rations were just about enough to sustain life, with nothing left for the generation of energy.

By ruthless effort the German Government seemed able to supply its army with food, but it was at the expense of the people back home, who constituted the "home front." It is one of the ironies of the war that no matter how much wheat-growing territory Germany conquered, her grain supplies kept decreasing. Economic warfare was again hitting the mark. It prevented soil fertilizer from getting into Germany so completely that the soil became impoverished and, in the hands of equally impoverished agriculturists, simply refused to yield. All the invaded lands of Russia, Belgium, Northern France, Serbia, and Rumania failed to provide Germany with her required grain supplies.

In Germany, as a result of the board's activities, the people were without those foods which produce energy—butter, meat, fats, oils. At this time the German civilian received per week the same weight of fat that a 3-cent postage stamp will carry in America. His coffee was gone. His bread was vanishing. Meat was a memory. Of fruit there was none. About all he had left were small quantities of rice, sago, home-grown vegetables, and an unending list of the famous German food substitutes. These might sustain life, but not energy.

The German was becoming demoralized, dispirited. That wonderful loyalty and devotion to the German war machine was disintegrating. This epidemic spread to the army. The fighting forces here and there became affected. Wealthy Germans who had spent lifetimes building up business abroad saw it crumbling before the attacks of America's trading with the enemy lists. A great wave of depression spread over the whilom granite empire. The War Trade Board with economic warfare had attained its goal.

Floating a Ship on Her Side

The Charles R. Van Hise Being Floated on Her Side Through the Welland Canal. View Looking Toward the Bow, Showing Position of Pontoon Tanks.

THAT ships were cut in two in order to get them out of the Great Lakes and into transatlantic service when the war put its tremendous demands on American shipping is commonly known; but the expedient adopted to get the giant Charles R. Van Hise through the Welland Canal has attracted little attention. This vessel was of too wide a beam to pass through the Welland Canal. It was floated through by turning it on to its side.

The Charles R. Van Hise is a 9,000-ton freighter, twice as large as any of the other vessels taken from the Great Lakes. The locks of the Welland Canal are 260 feet long and 44 feet wide. Besides cutting the Van Hise in two, it was necessary to turn her on her side, and then she had only eight inches clearance. The plan for handling large ships on the lakes was devised by F. A. Eustis and carried out by the Shipping Board engineers.

Six pontoon tanks were placed on the forward section of the Van Hise. The tanks, when filled, held about 500 tons of water. The pumps were put to work, filling the tanks, steam being furnished by the tugs. It required about five hours to fill the tanks, when the bow section of the vessel had rolled over perfectly on its side.

The forward section was towed from Buffalo to Port Colborne, Canada, the entrance to the Welland Canal. She was then towed into the first lock and the gates were closed, which revealed that the project was a success.

Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt Discusses the Doughboy

Red Cross Worker Doubts Whether America Appreciates the Unselfishness, Manliness, and Heroism of the Youths Who Fought in France

"I WONDER," said Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, "whether the American people really can visualize what their boys at the front have been through? I wonder if they realize how fine they've been?"

Mrs. Vanderbilt has recently returned from France, where she was in charge of canteens, and hospital work as well for the Red Cross, and where her war service brought her into close personal contact with every type of American soldier. She talked with "the boys," sick and well, wounded, dying, recovering, on their way to the fight, and suffering or unhurt on their way out of it; and coming back to America she feels, she says, that the people here have not yet glimpsed the full vision of those lads' valor—and with it their fine, brave gayety, their cleanness, their honesty. If they did, there would be more of acclamation to greet the boys' return.

"The American soldier," she said, "is the finest thing God ever made. The boys have proved that over there. They deserve all there is in us that we can give them, of appreciation and pride and good cheer."

Mrs. Vanderbilt has been in the thick of the war since 1914. She was one of the chief founders of the famous "American Ambulance" at Neuilly, which, when the United States went into the war, became Military Hospital No. 1. She has nursed wounded Tommies and dying Poilus, and there has been none of the horror of war, as it comes to a great hospital, that she has been spared. She thought she had had all her discipline, she says, before the Americans got into the fight—she had become familiar long since with terrible wounds that were never known before this war, and with such suffering as the average person never guesses, and she thought that she was "hardened"—not in the sense of being calloused, of course, but in the sure ability to bear frightful things quietly and to have no fear of "breaking down." But when the first wounded Americans were brought into the Neuilly hospital, he did break down.

"I just sobbed," she said; "I couldn't help it. And then I said, 'Boys, don't be afraid of my crying. Don't think I'm an old softie. I'm not; and I'm not going to be sentimental about you. But it just seems as if you were my own flesh and blood—and I want you to know that.'"

Out of that experience in France, with our own soldiers, Mrs. Vanderbilt has brought two messages home. One is the thoroughgoing fineness of the American soldier as she saw it there. The other is a hint of the effort of the Red Cross workers to give the boys something of what their own mothers might have given them, the spirit of "home" that they took to France, and the soldiers' appreciation of it.

"Every one knows that they've been splendid fighters," she said, "but I don't think people here do visualize the hell they went through, or the pluck and fine spirit with which they went through it, and bore all their suffering.

"They never dreaded death, those boys of ours. They lived with it. It was a commonplace. It never occurred to them to be afraid of it. They did dread being severely wounded. And oh, how they dreaded," Mrs. Vanderbilt smiled, "oh, how they dreaded and hated having to stay in bed! But they never seemed to give a thought to death. That was just a part of the game. It wasn't because they were callous; they were very far from being that; they were just thoroughly plucky and fine. Their spirit was magnificent.

"I remember on Thanksgiving Day I had gone to the hospital, as inspector for the Red Cross, to see that everything was all right about the boys' dinner, and I went around talking with some of the boys. In one of the wards a terribly wounded lad had just been brought in. He had been shot through the lungs and was breathing with great difficulty, and I stopped by his bed to say something to him. He was a fine-looking lad, with beautiful thick wavy hair, and I said—wanting to say something light and casual—'What wonderful hair you have, boy. I envy you that hair of yours.'

"His eyes had the look of a man who is very ill and in great pain, but he grinned at me. 'There's nothing the matter with your own hair,' he said, and I laughed, and told him that I wished it was like his, and he grinned again, with a devilish look. 'In fact, you've got darn good hair for an old lady!'

"The other boys all laughed and seemed to be wondering what I was going to say to him. I said, 'That's enough for you now. You must rest. The Thanksgiving dinner will be here soon, and you mustn't talk any more.' Then I went to another ward. Half an hour later I came back, and that boy's bed was empty, and when I asked where he was the others told me. 'He went West ten minutes after you left him,' they said.

"And I told them that the sadness mustn't spoil their Thanksgiving, that the boy wasn't dead, that he was carrying on just the same, and that they must, too. Twenty minutes after that their Thanksgiving dinner came in, and they all pulled themselves together and enjoyed it. They weren't callous; it nearly broke their hearts to see their comrade die; but they were just plucky and gay and fine.

"I remember one lad, too, who had been badly wounded, and whose wound was being probed. Of course it was unspeakably painful, and the doctor said, 'I hope I'm not hurting you too much, Buddy.'

"'Oh, no, you're not hurting me, damn you,' the boy answered. 'You're only irritating me!'

"They were always so funny and slangy. One time a lovely English girl who was working with us came to me in great perplexity. 'Mrs. Vanderbilt,' she said, 'I can't understand the way these boys talk. I said something to one just now and he said, 'Snow again, kid, I don't get your grip!'

"The freshness and vitality and boyishness of our soldiers meant much to the French," Mrs. Vanderbilt went on. "There is no youth left in France now. Even the children are old. And to the worn, tired French Nation the American boys brought this marvelous freshness, vitality, youth. It won the French people's hearts completely—their youth and vividness and cheeriness. And their wonderful spark and vitality put new strength and health into a tired people.

"Another very striking thing that I always noticed about those lads of ours was their straightness," Mrs. Vanderbilt continued. "For instance, when the cigarettes were passed around—and cigarettes meant so much to them—and each boy got two, if one lad happened to be passing through the room again, or to get to the other end of the line for some reason after he had got his cigarettes, so that he was offered another 'ration,' he wouldn't take it—not without explaining that he had already had them. That has happened to me again and again.

"And they went through hell. There's no other word for it. It wasn't only the fighting and being wounded—it was the suffering afterward. The boys dreaded the long agony of the trip back to the hospital far more than they dreaded going into the fight and being in danger of death. The difficulties of transportation and the tremendous congestion both on the way to and in the hospitals made everything very hard. There were often long waits—hours of torment—before anything could be done even to ease the pain. Our boys sometimes lay out in the mud and the rain, wounded, for thirty-six hours before they were picked up and brought to the hospital. In the hospital itself they often had to wait and wait, with nothing but first-aid treatment. It is that that I am thinking of more even than the fighting when I say that they went through hell. I wish our people here could visualize it, could realize what these boys who are coming back have been through, understand the pain they suffered, and their brave endurance through it all.

"It was all tragedy or comedy," she went on, "first one, then the other, close together. I've never had so many hearty laughs, and there have never been so many sobs in my throat. It makes me very tired," she added, "now that I am at home again, to have people speak of the 'sacrifices' I must have made, and all that sort of thing. Sacrifice! It was the greatest privilege I've ever known. Those four years of war work were the great years of my life. And when our own boys came there was nothing one couldn't do. One never stopped to think of whether or not one was 'tired,' one just went on. And the hard thing wasn't to go on working; it was stopping and coming home that was hard.

"But to go back to the boys; the French loved them and appreciated them. When a carriage or car with wounded soldiers in it drove down the Champs Elysées, every hat came off and people cheered until the boys were out of sight. When the boys back from the front who weren't wounded paraded, they were fairly covered with flowers. There was nothing the people couldn't do to show their pride and appreciation of our boys. And of course the Americans over there did the same thing. We knew what the boys had been through; we cheered ourselves hoarse.

"Then they come back here, these boys who have been so wonderful, and have fought and suffered so for us all, to a perfectly cold reception in this cheerless, gray city, that isn't even their home; nobody seems to pay any attention to them; every one looks as if nothing had happened, as if life were going on just the same. I used to say to the boys in the hospital, 'Wait until you get home; you'll see how proud we all are of you!' And when they get in to New York—these boys whom the French have cheered and covered with flowers—they see nothing of the sort. They meet a stolid lot of people who are afraid even to speak to them.

"It is not that I mean to criticise the people here," Mrs. Vanderbilt added, "or to fail to appreciate the sacrifices that thousands and thousands of those here at home have made. It is just that I feel that they don't visualize the situation, or realize how tremendous their pride in their soldiers should be. I want so to tell them, to make them see. Why, the crowds in the street ought to give everything they have in themselves of cheer and pride for our boys! Can't we understand what they have done? And can't we do something to make them see that we understand, to warm their hearts in their homecoming?"

Mrs. Vanderbilt was walking down Fifth Avenue one day last week when a young private soldier stepped up to her with outstretched hand. "Gosh, Mrs. Vanderbilt," he cried, "I'm glad to see you!"

"And then," she said, in telling the story, "he went on to say how much he had enjoyed being in the hospital at Neuilly. I said, 'Enjoyed being in a hospital?' Oh, that is too much blarney!' and he said 'no. I mean every word of it. I enjoyed being there. You were all so good to us. You made us feel at home.'

"Well," she went on, "that is what every American Red Cross woman in France tried to do. And I wish I could make the American mothers realize how keenly the American women over there felt that it was up to them to care for the American boys as their mothers cared for them at home."

THE MYTH OF "REPERTORY"

By JOHN CORBIN

THE present dramatic season, as yet scarcely half over, has witnessed the inception and the abandonment of two organizations that proclaimed themselves repertory companies—one managed by Iden Payne, the other by Norman Trevor and Cyril Harcourt. Last year saw the end of the Washington Square Players, and the year before the end of Grace George's "repertory" productions at The Playhouse. Scarcely a season has been without a similar phenomenon back to The New Theatre, which failed gigantically. And still the call is heard for "repertory." In reviewing William Winter's "Life of David Belasco," J. Ranken Towse, dramatic critic of The Evening Post, holds it against Mr. Belasco that, though "the best qualified man in his profession" and phenomenally successful financially, "he has not, as the old-time managers did, founded a permanent repertory company."

The question seems apropros whether Mr. Belasco would be as successful, or, indeed, would be regarded as so well qualified in his profession, if he had founded one of these companies. When the two late repertory ventures were announced at the beginning of the present season that genial and shrewd observer of things theatrical, George S. Kaufman, remarked that the prospect was very hopeful. "There are only two things that can kill a repertory company," he said. "One is a failure, and the other is a success." The simple fact seems to be that "repertory" is a myth, a will-o'-the-wisp, and that the pursuit of it, if it is sincere and resolute, is the most fatal undertaking possible in a profession which is, above all others, strewn with the corpses of the fallen.

The sincerity of this season's ventures is at best questionable. They were certainly not resolute. To those who are wise in the mental processes of Broadway, the significance of such schemes is obvious. A manager has a play, perhaps several plays, which he knows to be ill-adapted to the general public, but which he hopes will attract a special public for a few weeks. He has also a theatre for which a profitable tenant is not forthcoming. So he puts the dubious play into the doubtful theatre and announces a repertory venture—relying on the vogue among our intelligentsia of an utterly vague and indeterminate phrase to attract the attention of the special public he is after.

If the play fails there is an end of everything—as happened with Iden Payne at the Belmont. If by any chance it succeeds the end of the "repertory" idea is equally indicated; for the part of managerial wisdom is to continue the production as long as it pays a profit and then send it out for a tour on the road, after which there will be further profits in moving picture and stock rights.

In the venture of Messrs. Trevor & Harcourt at the Comedy there seems to have been an unusual element of sincerity—and the result was unusually misfortunate. Their opening production, "An Ideal Husband," by Oscar Wilde, succeeded beyond expectation; but they held loyally to their plan of producing other plays and so ended its run, sending it on the road. They themselves, of course, had to remain behind, and other members of the cast refused to leave New York. So they had to improvise a substitute cast—with the result that the production died the death in Chicago. Their loyalty to the "repertory" idea had slaughtered a valuable property. Then their second production failed, and the Comedy Theatre ceased to be the home of "repertory." This, or something very like it, is the story of most ventures of the kind, including Grace George's two memorable seasons at The Playhouse.

It is high time that the simple truth be told about this myth of repertory and this will-o'-the-wisp of the stock company. What is a repertory? When we speak of a singer's repertory we know what we mean. It is "a store or collection, a treasury, a magazine," of songs which he has mastered and which constitutes his professional stock as a singer. What a repertory theatre is Henry James knew very well when, in "The Tragic Muse," he spoke of "a great academic, artistic" institution, "rich in its repertory, rich in the high quality and the wide array of its servants."

The Théâtre Français is a repertory theatre, and by means of a large and versatile company residing permanently in Paris, it revives from time to time the great Greek and French classics, together with the more memorable French plays of recent times. There are repertory theatres in the capitals of Germany and Austria and Hungary which keep alive and vivid in the national consciousness not only the Greek and German classics, but classics of Italy, Spain, France, and England. This is the sense in which the founders of The New Theatre used the word—and it is a sense in which there has never been a repertory theatre in any English-speaking country.

Granville Barker, English Theatrical Manager, Who Is a Believer in the Repertory System.

It is possible, of course, for a theatre to have a repertory which is less extensive. Granted a large and versatile resident company, a certain number of plays can be kept in hand and revived from time to time. Until toward the close of the last century the versatile resident company was the characteristic type of theatrical venture in England and America. In point of fact, the majority of their productions were new plays of a quality necessarily inferior. They revived some few classics, and even modern successes of note, but only at irregular intervals and generally as a stop-gap when the supply of novelties temporarily failed. Primarily they were not repertory companies. They were merely what they were called, stock companies.

Why did the stock company fail and die out? Simply and solely because the railway succeeded. From the beginning of time theatric art had been local, each company being limited to a single city. Toward the end of the last century the civilized world had become a network of steel rails, along which a production which was successful in any city could speed to all others, reaping a profit in each "stand" on the route. Intense competition ensued, as a result of which money was lavishly spent on scenery and costumes; the salaries of actors doubled and redoubled. Today, even if a manager were willing to forego a great fortune to become director of a stock company, he could not do so and live. As for the true repertory theatre, it has never been possible, even on the Continent, except with a liberal subvention.

This effect of the railway was felt less severely in Europe than in America. Distances were shorter and capitals, each with its established art theatre, were much more numerous; so that people of the provincial cities continued to seek their dramatic education and their theatric diversion in the metropolis. It long remained the custom among playwrights to sell the rights in each new piece only for a local production.

Great actors are no longer content with a merely local public and with local pay. Coquelin and Bernhardt left the Français to become world-famous. Guitry and others followed. In Vienna, Sonnenthal and Kainz retained their connection with the Hofburg Theatre until their death; but they demanded (especially Kainz) frequent leave to make tours, and they exacted salaries far beyond their actual commercial value to the management of the Hofburg. In Berlin and the minor German capitals the actors who remain in the royal companies are turgid and old-fashioned to a degree—actors for whom no other public is possible. The playwrights followed the actors, especially in France. Thus Rostand, though he owed his start to the Français, gave "Cyrano," "L'Aiglon," and "Chantecler" to Coquelin, Bernhardt, and Guitry, respectively, who produced them on the boulevards.

The attempt of the founders of the New Theatre to establish a repertory company was misinformed and misguided, precisely as was the attempt of the framers of our National Constitution to adapt essential principles of English Parliamentary government. In both cases obsolete or obsolescent institutions failed to meet the real needs of a world that had passed beyond them. In New York when a manager revives a play the public looks askance at it—as at an attempt to galvanize a dead one and palm it off as a novelty. The New Theatre ventured on the experiment only once, and then with a modern play. It never had a repertory of any kind. And it never had a real stock company. The leading Shakespearean actors of the country were engaged for it, but they required salaries far beyond their local earning power, and proved otherwise impracticable. After they left plays with great parts—"Hamlet," "Othello," "Lear," "Macbeth," and, in fact, all the greatest classics—became impossible. Even in minor classics leading parts were largely played by guests imported into the company—Grace George, Annie Russell, Bertha Kalich, and others. The difficulty as to new plays was similar. Leading playwrights, accustomed to the rewards of a road tour, refused to give the theatre their pieces. In addition, many needless mistakes were made, as for example in the size of the theatre and the scale of expense it involved. The total loss on the institution was upward of three millions. Even this did not discourage the founders, who were to the last eager to fulfill their promise to the city. They actually secured a new plot of land in the Times Square section, and employed an architect to design an ideal house. But in the end the practical difficulties of the problem wore them out. The repertory art theatre, it would seem; is a last year's nest.

The practical difficulties of the undertaking were further illustrated in the subsequent venture of Granville Barker, who shared, and doubtless still shares, in the "repertory" delusion. He brought five plays. The opening production, "Androcles and the Lion," was a success of the first order. But, like Messrs. Trevor and Harcourt, he remained loyal to his ideal, with this difference that he attempted to run the second production, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," concurrently at the same theatre, in the Continental manner, the two alternating from day to day. Now, nothing is more sensitive than the life of a "run." All managers declare, and have abundant proof of the fact, that to interrupt a run, even to change it to another theatre, is generally most harmful. The effect of producing another play at the same house is to cut in half the number of those who are seeing and talking about the first, and to give the impression that it was not really a success. In the case of "Androcles," this impression was strengthened by the fact that the new piece failed. When "The Doctor's Dilemma" was added to the "repertory," and likewise failed, disaster overtook the enterprise, which closed with a loss of many thousands of dollars.

There can be little doubt that if "Androcles" had been produced at a smaller theatre, such as the Maxine Elliott, which was then available, it would have had a long and very prosperous run, followed by an equally prosperous road tour. The other plays could have been produced elsewhere, and when they failed could have been withdrawn at once with a minimum of loss and without harm to "Androcles." The one success would have amply paid for the two failures, and, perhaps, have provided for further productions, possibly successful ones. In a word, the only practical form of production today is the production for an uninterrupted run.

The fascination which the repertory theatre, even the old stock company, exerts upon the minds of theatrical idealists is easy to understand. A "great academic, artistic" institution, which would imbue each succeeding generation with the best spirit of national drama and the drama of the world, would be of inestimable value in the life of the city and of the nation. As a training school for actors it would be beyond price.

Meanwhile, in the absence of an endowment of millions, the best point of attack on the problem is obviously that which involves the least risk of money and which is most nearly in harmony with the present methods of the theatre, the present psychology of the playgoing public. Shortly after the demise of The New Theatre a Society was organized to support good productions of any kind by taking tickets for them, with the intention of making an occasional production of its own. The war reduced the membership of The Drama Society and further embarrassed it by virtually putting an end to the production on Broadway of really artistic plays. But before going into abeyance it produced "The Tempest" with considerable success, both artistic and popular, and with a financial loss which, in comparison with the losses of other like ventures, was negligible. Whereas Augustin Daly's production of "The Tempest" ran for only thirteen performances, that of The Drama Society ran for thirty-five performances and was witnessed by over 45,000 people, largely school children who paid from 10 to 50 cents.

More strongly than ever I am convinced that the most hopeful method is to form a society and produce plays singly in any available theatre for as long a run as possible. If the organization meets with popular encouragement and artistic success there will be plenty of time to buy or build a theatre and to think of establishing a repertory. If not, the loss both of effort and of money will be reduced to a minimum.

Society Again in Frills and Furbelows

Peace Partly Solved the Servant Problem, and It's No Longer Bad Form to Give Course Dinners and Dress Well

By RICHARD BARRY.

OH, I am so glad Madame is to have dinners served in courses again. Now I can wash the dishes between the courses," one servant was overheard to say to her mistress as the new order for the day was handed downstairs after the long, long blowing of the sirens marked the return of peace.

Madame also was pleased, for, from the moment on Nov. 12, when the gas mask factory in Long Island City employing 12,000 first-class female servants was closed down, right up to date, fast-growing ranks of domestics have been trailing back toward the city and their old employments, and the servant problem—hoghol—is fast being solved.

Of course, it is very bad form to discuss the servant problem in a drawing room, but, really, it does exist, being the base and marrow and substratum of all our delightful little joys and sorrows which are so much more important than more important things. So, now that the khaki of the ex-doughboy may be transmogrified into the purple broadcloth and brass buttons of the appareled footman, now that the cotton apron of the lint tearer and the cartridge packer may be translated into the cap and apron of the attentive housemaid, the social matron again breathes more freely. The makers of war munitions are now the makers of the munitions of peace!

What pleasing and attractive structures they are rearing, what a happy comedy of manners they are rehearsing and performing daily and nightly! The mistress, too, has abandoned the Woman's National League for Superfluous Service and has now claimed her privileges and perquisites as a charter member of the Manhattan Maidens' and Matrons' Social Security Club. No longer is put the question, "What clothes can I spare to give the league?" Instead, every one is asking, "What shall I wear to the costume ball?"

"Domestics are trailing back toward the city."

"She posed eleven times as Columbia."

One charming though statuesque matron was overheard to remark the other day, "Now that my sacrifices are over, I can begin again to clothe myself properly." The sacrifices of this fascinating and distinguished patriot took the form of lending her personality, including her admired figure, to the chef d'oeuvre of the late tableau makers. She has been seen at one time and another on floats, parading up and down Fifth Avenue, at bazaars, in the armories, in the hotels, at functions in private homes, and, twice during the last Summer, in woodland vivants. During the period of the war she appeared, by actual count, eleven times as Columbia, draped in the Stars and Stripes; nine times as La Belle France, swathed in the Tricolor; three times as Britannia, enveloped in the Union Jack; six times as bleeding Belgium—she was a bit robust for this, yet very effective, with a strip of strawberry bandage over her temples, and her golden curls escaping underneath; and once as Mighty Russia, though this was in the earlier days before the Great Bear had toppled.

These ennobling sacrifices doubtless made of this admirable lady a veritable American Jeanne d'Arc, and if no one has yet recommended that Congress confer on her the D. S. M., that recommendation is made here and now.

One of the most devoted and loyal friends of society this Winter is the General Staff of the army, for it has issued an order that all officers and men are permitted to wear their uniforms, if they wish, for three months after being honorably discharged. For this society is deeply appreciative. It has had no more thoughtful attention in many a long year. For what is more decorative at any function, be it either a dinner table, the drawing room, a ball room or an opera box, than a few smart uniforms sprinkled here and there among formal male attire.

While this social season promises to be the best that New York has seen in many years, while every hotel and apartment house is filled to overflowing, while the caterers and the restaurants beg that their orders be less rather than more, the trains to Florida and California are also more in demand than ever before. A party which planned to start on its annual trip to California early in January made application for reservations the middle of December, but was told that even then it was absolutely impossible to promise anything out of Chicago after Dec. 26 and before Feb. 1. Therefore, to get to California in January this party was obliged to leave Chicago on Christmas Day.

The Florida beaches began filling up this year a week or ten days earlier than usual, and doubtless by the time the height of the season is reached, at the end of January, procuring accommodations there will require the same diplomatic and financial resource as getting a table New Year's Eve at a New York restaurant. If there is any problem which is bothering the United States Labor Department it will not concern those who are willing or able to serve as waiters at any of the fashionable Winter resorts.

Last year this luxurious flying about was discouraged in all possible ways. Even the weather conspired with the Government and all the powers in Europe to discourage persons either from entertaining in New York or from entraining out of New York. This year the powers of Europe associated with the Government of the United States, including the Weather Bureau and the meteorological experts, have done all they could to encourage both entertaining and entraining.

Of course, the metamorphosis is not as yet complete. Society is always correct, especially in observance of the technicalities, and we are at present merely living through the armistice, which, speaking strictly, is but an antechambre to peace. Therefore, we find that our social favorites have not instantly abandoned war activities. These have merely, in many instances, assumed a different form of expression. For instance, those ladies who, before Nov. 11, could be seen in the somewhat severe feminine uniform then in vogue, in the canteens and the tea shops, ministering to the uplift of the sojourning soldier, sailor, and marine, are still employed in similar beneficence.

Woven and entwined in the very structure of this new house of social joys there is a potent apprehension. It concerns the approach of that fearful date, July 1, 1919. In anticipation of the fatal day, it seems that the gayeties of this season are augmented even beyond the powers of a mere armistice. Peace itself could hardly furish the fillip of the indulgence (discreet, always, we hope) created by contemplation of the awful dryness which must follow next July. Many who heretofore would have refused "just another glass" are now induced to lower the last barriers on the score that they may never have another chance.

Yet, I know a man who boasts of the contents of a vast stone cellar he has built in Canada, where repose the rarest vintages of France and Italy and California, the finest distillations of Ireland, Scotland, and Kentucky. Another has erected on his Virginia farm what closely resembles an old Indian stockade, in which he has secreted enough tipple to last, he hopes, through the long drought. In these fin de siècle fortresses we may imagine them beleaguered by the fanatical hordes of prohibition and bravely defending the final citadels of Personal Liberty!

These fragrant cases in the great desert of enforced teetotalism, however, needs must be located in the far-distant lands, places all but mythical to the average social gathering for whom the old adage must be revised, "Eat, drink, and be married, for tomorrow there will be no more booze."

America's New Influence on European Life

People Over There Sure to Imitate Us, Says a Briton, But They Won't Play Baseball or Eat Our Breakfast Bacon

By FRANK DILNOT,
New York Correspondent of The London Daily Chronicle.

EUROPE is in the midst of political and social transformation. In the new era there will be changes not only in Governmental methods, but in the habits of individuals. Among the new factors in European life will be the increasing assimilation of characteristics from America. There will be no revolutionary change, I think, but a growing development in which the mental and physical customs of America will make a deep mark.

Millions of American soldiers have taken the stamp of American personality to Europe. For years to come America must be the source of assistance and supplies to a war-stricken world. It will be an educative part for America herself; to the peoples of the other countries it will mean a new stage of existence, with all manner of alterations in outlook, in methods, and, possibly to some extent, in taste.

I saw the other day an article dealing with the new-found preference of European women for American husbands. It is not that they have fallen in love with khaki, for they had plenty of that before America entered the war. What has happened is that the new type of manhood has struck the imagination and touched the feelings of the women. Of course, the sheer newness of these men has something to do with it, but that is only a preliminary.

Surveying the American soldiers as they went off, stalwart young citizens drawn from every class of life, I was impressed by the difference between them and the European young men. America is undoubtedly developing a race of its own through a variety of reacting conditions, where the climate, food, political tendencies, and material well-being each have an influence. These young men, on the whole, were taller than the Europeans, not so thick set, keener in the face and eye, with thinner hips and a quick nervousness all over them.

They were more serious, too. At close quarters they lacked some of the characteristics of the English and French soldiers. They were abrupt and direct in speech. They were also less accustomed to formality, less used to the ameliorating word, and had altogether less respect for convention, as we understand it in Europe. They were also more individual. Altogether, with their omissions and their qualities, they were of a type which is as strange in Europe as some distinct race. Withal, they had the essentials of strength and manliness above everything else. The gentle women of the world have never failed to appreciate such qualities. No wonder that feminine Europe has fallen in love with the American soldier. All this, however, is but an indication of coming events.

The men in khaki have been on the other side spreading the message of America. Their work is now to be carried on in other directions and by another medium. For years to come the dismantled countries of Europe—and that includes practically all of them, for the neutrals are in some directions as badly off as the belligerents—will require vast supplies of food from America, and, above all things, materials, raw, manufactured, and semi-manufactured, to build up factories, construct bridges and railroads, to make afresh destroyed cities, and, indeed, to rebuild the whole fabric of industrial life.

American material, American brains, American leadership, will take in train to Europe tens of thousands of Americans equipped with the qualities which Europe needs. Spreading throughout all sections of life American influence will be felt. It will be welcomed not with polite complacency as heretofore, but with a thankful fervor which will of itself spread deep and wide all kinds of external American influences.

There is so much excellent and well-founded discussion as to the similarity in fundamentals of the great democracies that one is sometimes inclined to overlook the marked differences in the small things of life; and, after all, it is the small things that make up the principal part of the existence for most people. It's all very well for the highbrows to tell us about the emotions, national and international. Influential sections are interested. Everybody, and not just a section, is interested in matters of food, drink, dress, talk, making love, amusing the children, going to church or the theatre. Strange how widely Europe differs from America in many of these things.

"I cannot see baseball supplanting cricket."

It is not to be expected that the French or English will proceed to become enamored of American intonation or pronunciation. The French are adaptable, but their swift, soft talk will certainly not adjust itself to the harder, slower accent of America.

Nor must there be any illusion with regard to the English. Their liquid vowel sounds will still be regarded by them as the proper method of expression of the English language. In both countries the American accent will continue to have rather a foreign sound.

And yet I can foresee a certain percolation of what, for want of a better term, I may call the "American language"—the idioms, the lightning turn of phrase, the sudden visualization of an idea—in a word; the untrammeled use of unusual sentences to meet unusual emergencies, the sparkling verbal humor. All these, and many other things which go to the kernel of a language, will make themselves felt not only in France and England, but all over the European countries and in every place where the new and powerful influence of America as a nation penetrates.

The Americans are probably the best-dressed nation in the world, in the sense that they are more careful and precise and sometimes more elaborate than any other people. The ordinary men in the streets of New York, for example, are dressed with a precision which is not equaled in any great city in Europe, a fact which may arise from material prosperity, but which also indicates a habit of mind, a confidence, perhaps even a touch of assertiveness. But there it is. No one from Europe can fail to realize it immediately on arrival.

Americans carry this habit with them to Europe. They do not always dress in the same way as Europeans, but they always dress extremely well from an American point of view. Hitherto Paris has been the home of ladies' fashion for the world, London the centre of men's fashion, and it is an interesting speculation whether America may not leave an impression on the dress of people abroad. One influence goes with another where nations are concerned.

While Europe will probably not become immediately enthusiastic over American dress, it is almost certain that various phases of it will assert themselves in the minds of European fashion-makers. Fashion is a spasmodic thing. It may well be that in the coming year or two there will be a rage in Europe for certain American articles of attire, and that Fifth Avenue firms and others will find themselves international depots for special varieties of coats, or hats, or boots, or skirts. Perhaps, within a period of months, we shall see inscriptions in Paris and London on customers' and tailors' windows: "The latest from Fifth Avenue."

America is a wonderfully sober, great nation. Climate has a good deal to do with it. Habit grows, and, apart from the insidious cocktails, there is less drinking in this country, I am perfectly certain, than in any country on the face of the globe. It is just a question as to whether the damp atmosphere of Europe, the different method of life, and the effect of association will or will not make some change in the peaceful American army of invasion in the years to come. On the whole, it is probable that the Americans will exercise an influence in a greater degree than they will be influenced. It may well be that prohibition, firmly established in many States of the Union, will provide an influence in a similar direction abroad. I have frequently heard prohibition States cited as examples in discussions on the liquor question in the House of Commons, and such examples will have treble weight in the future.

One thing England could most advantageously copy, and that is the practice of having men as bartenders. The practice of having women to serve drink behind the bars is a survival which has many objections.

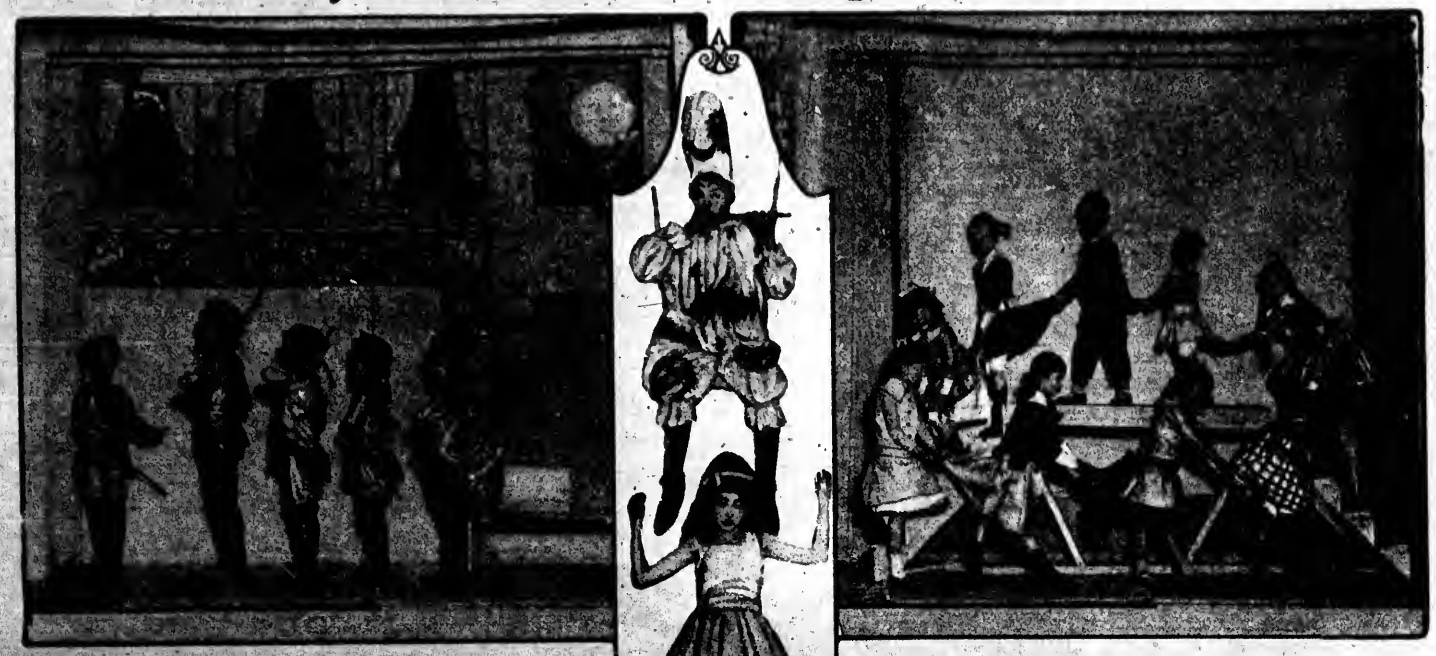
With regard to amusements, I see it forecast that one may look for the permanent establishment of American baseball in Europe. I doubt it. It is a game peculiarly suited to the American temperament, but there is such a variety of well-rooted and much loved pastimes, especially among an out-of-doors people like the British, that I cannot see baseball supplanting cricket, for example. Cricket has a subtle charm not to be known by those who have not played it or been brought up to it from boyhood.

So far as the theatre is concerned, there will probably be a greater market than ever for the American play, always a popular feature in London. In the theatres themselves there is little or nothing for Europe to learn. The best London theatres, for instance, are more comfortable in many ways than the best New York theatres. The lounges, buffets, tearooms, and other comforts and conveniences are sadly missed by a stranger in New York. Perhaps in response to the many good things America is sending us we may be able to provide a hint or two on our own account.

Europe will very likely get new dishes added to its dietary through its closer association with the United States. Why cannot we have the delicious grapefruit for breakfast that you have here? Why are we denied buckwheat cakes? Broiled chicken is almost unknown in European restaurants. Many Europeans fall in love with it when they come to America. Corned beef hash will begin to appear on bills of fare. I should not be surprised to see waffles become almost a rage.

We might beg of you not to introduce your breakfast bacon, because that is one of our disappointments here. But the many delicacies unknown to us on the other side offer a wide field in which breakfast bacon becomes an insignificant speck, and there will be fresh delights of the table opened to all kinds of homes in Europe as the American invasion reaches its height.

Society Children to Help French Waifs



THE Children of the Frontier Committee (the Comité Franco-Americaine pour la Protection des Enfants de la Frontier, as it is known in France) has for the last three and a half years been taking care of homeless little French children in the devastated areas of France and Belgium.

To a large majority of these the end of the war does not mean the end of their homelessness. The members in charge of the work in France believe that it will be at least another year before the situation there becomes permanently settled.

To help add to the fund which is necessary for the support of these fatherless waifs, a group of New York society children are to take part in a series of tableaux at the Punch and Judy Theatre on the morning of Jan. 25 and the afternoon of Jan. 26. The tableaux, which are to be accompanied by little French songs, are representations of illustrations by Boutet de Monvel, the well-known French artist. His pictures of French children as they were before the war are a joy to the eye. The Children of the Frontier Committee is doing much to bring their charges to their former state of happiness, and it is peculiarly fitting that it is the children of America who are helping in that work.

Today the committee has under its care something like two thousand children. The numbers are continually shifting. Just as soon as some go there are hundreds to take their places. A chance occurrence gave birth to this organization. In the early days of August, 1914, M. Jean Cruppi, ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs and of Justice of the French Republic, advised Frederic R. Coudert, a prominent New York attorney, who happened to be in Paris at the time, that in Belfort, near Alsace, and its environs there were about eighty helpless children who would be dependent upon charity. The two men went to Belfort for the eighty waifs, as they supposed, but found instead that there were 205 of them.

All of these were loaded on cars by the Military Government and taken to Paris. They were quartered in an old seminary near Yvetot, which thus became the first colony of the enterprise. As rapidly as money and shelter permitted, the work was extended and new colonies added. There are thirty-two localities where the society is carrying on its work.

The following is an extract from a letter sent by one of the directors of the work in France:

"A little Belgian who, when I left him last October, had been sad and silent, broken over the death of his little brother, was the merriest of all. There were two little girls who had just been brought in from Germany, where they had been held prisoners since the beginning of the war in a civil camp near Berlin; also two boys and a girl I had brought from the front before going to America last Fall. They had been injured by shrapnel; one had lost a leg, the other a foot, and another's leg was so badly broken that he will always wear an orthopedic apparatus. The little boy who had lost his leg had been fitted with another one, and he can now run about and drill with the other children so well that no one would dream that he was lame."

Besides providing funds for the carrying on of the work in France, the committee here also sends across monthly thousands of articles of clothing especially made for the children. The material is bought at cost or wholesale prices, is folded, designed and arranged by voluntary help and only those steps in the process of making paid for which cannot possibly be gotten otherwise. The large floor at 680 Fifth Avenue which houses the offices and the workroom of the organization was donated by John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

It costs $72 to feed and $35 to clothe one child for a year. In order to continue this work as long as it is necessary to do so, the Children of the Frontier Committee needs more funds. The children's performance at the Punch and Judy is expected to help in no small measure.

Food Bootlegging Among the German People

System Founded on Suspicion and Distrust Failed Miserably While Hoover's Voluntary Rationing Was Succeeding---Forty Per Cent. of Supplies Hoarded

WHISKY bootlegging is bad in some parts of this country, but neither now nor at any other time has it been so bad as was food bootlegging in Germany and Austria in the period preceding the armistice.

In bringing out the significance of conditions in Germany and Austria, this comparison is inadequate, for in this country bootlegging stood apart from the prosecution of the war, while in the Teutonic countries the practice of illicit trade in food, grown to an enormous extent, undermined the power of resistance to allied attack.

Sprees—as they may well be called—of frying a delicacy in butter at $a pound or of indulgence in a surreptitious roast pig at ten times its fixed market price were forms of dissipation to compare with Rome in her worst days. Clandestine dinners with fat goose as the chief dish of the menu, when no geese were to be had on the open market, were always possible owing to the industry of the thousands of food bootleggers. Instead of a red nose these Teutonic sybarites were betrayed by fatter cheeks and increasing weight.

There were heavy penalties against the illicit traffic, large fines and a maximum of five years' imprisonment, but the profits were so great that the fine, the usual penalty in the enormous number of convictions, was a trifle. In the end all classes but the poorest, consisting mainly of workmen's families, got some of their food by the bottlegger's route. The result was that, owing to the rigid rationing methods employed, under-nourishment fell most heavily on that part of the population which had to carry the burden of the manual work, and which had not the means to obtain supplies of food by the underground route. When a full account of this illicit trading in food can be written, it will produce undoubtedly a remarkable story.

Some information on this subject, which has a broad bearing on the cause of Germany's collapse as well as on the immediate problem, is now coming out. Since the armistice the Federal Food Administration at Washington has been trying to find out everything possible about the food conditions in Germany and Austria. According to an official of the Administration, it is estimated that in the period preceding Germany's collapse 40 per cent. of the available food was being hoarded, that is, it was illegally held for high prices or against the fear of famine. This condition prevails today, and one of the difficulties in solving Germany's immediate food problem is to bring out of its hiding places—such as pits in the ground known to the peasant farmers—food to take care of Germany for several months.

On the basis of the latest information obtainable by the Food Administration Germany had at the time of the armistice sufficient food to last for eight months, so that with an estimated 40 per cent. hoarded it is seen what a part this proportion plays in the problem. The armistice, instead of relieving the situation, has made the situation worse. The peasant put the lid down tighter than ever.

When the announcement was made the other day that Herbert C. Hoover, Food Administrator for the United States, was to have charge as general food director of all the allied machinery for the distribution of food in Europe, one of the questions asked was as to how this machinery would operate in connection with the Teutons. The first step necessary, it is learned at Washington, was to get the lid off this hidden food. It was driven into hiding by an autocratic food system, just the opposite of that employed by Mr. Hoover in this country, which rested on voluntary democratic co-operation, and it is one of the dramatic contrasts of the war that the man who built up the food system is called upon to overcome the huge evil of unequal distribution which sprang out of it.

Both systems called on the patriotism of the people. Hoover showed from first to last that he was sincere in his call and fully trusted that the people would respond. When the crisis came the American people did respond. As a measure of the sacrifice, they reduced their consumption of flour to 45 per cent. of the normal, actually 600,000 pounds less per month than the lowest estimate of the Food Administration.

Herbert C. Hoover.

The German Food Administrator appealed to the patriotism of the German people with a large Teutonic flourish, but at the same time he showed that he had no confidence that the appeal would be answered, for the autocratic food system undertook to keep a check on the movement of the food every step of the way from the producer to the consumer. It was strikingly like other Teutonic efficiency systems, taking apparently everything into nice account except human nature. Suspicion by the Government engendered suspicion by the consumer and the producer, and an extensive underground system of evasion, or food bootlegging, grew from a small beginning.

But the Hoover allied food organization must now bring out that secreted food, for to save Germany from anarchy the food nearest at hand must be made immediately available. If necessary, food will be rushed in, but it is not the intention to do so unless some greater emergency appears. The plan which awaits the indorsement of the Allies does not contemplate supplying Germany with food from this country, but to permit Germany to use 1,000,000 tons of her shipping—the remainder being turned over to the Allies to serve the urgent food needs of other European countries—to seek a supply of food in South America, principally in the Argentine.

On account of the shortage in shipping there are large surpluses of both wheat and meat in Argentina, and there, it is estimated, Germany's needs could be met. There are 50,000,000 bushels of old wheat in the Argentine, and the reserve of the new crop, ready for export in January, is placed at 120,000,000 bushels. Germany had extensive investments in the Argentine before the war, and, it is thought, would have no difficulty in financing this operation; that she would be expected to do.

In the last year of the war more than 1,000,000 head of cattle in Germany were secretly slaughtered and sold through illicit dealers, according to German estimates now available.

As one of the last resorts to stop the spread of this food bootlegging, it was proposed to make the crime of violation of the food laws high treason. On Sept. 25 the Austrian and Hungarian Price-Testing Commissions met. The Chairman declared that until disinterested control was established in some form or other the commission would labor in vain, and that in view of the alarming menace of profiteering and illicit trade, every attempt to interfere with official arrangements of the regular food supply should be proclaimed high treason.

The Bavarian Ministry of the Interior, in a campaign against food irregularities in the period preceding the collapse of Germany, issued a decree which may be summarized as follows:

"Illicit trade must be fought by every available means. It is not enough to intrust the campaign to a few officials responsible for the public safety, who are already so overburdened; the general public also must help, and should be invited to notify to the nearest police station any illegalities they may discover. Nobody should passively permit conscienceless persons to turn the general need to their own selfish advantage thereby endangering the public safety. High rewards are offered for information and may be won by all who help in the discovery of irregularities. Offenders must be most severely punished. * * * Many hotels supply meat to their guests daily, both for lunch and dinner, often without cards and in large quantities; they disregard the meatless days and the regulations on the simplification of the menus, and obtain meat by secret slaughterings and by illicit trade."

In the hope of reducing the illicit slaughtering the Weimar State Meat Bureau issued in September an order for the stricter control of live stock which contained the following:

"Births of calves and deaths of cattle, (including calves,) and any reduction of live stock otherwise than by delivery (by theft, for instance) must in every case be notified within forty-eight hours to the District of the State offices."

The General Commander of the Seventh Army Corps posted this warning to the population on Oct. 16: "Surplus districts are so much impoverished by these proceedings (hoarding excursions) as to run a serious risk of being unable to discharge their obligations for the delivery of potatoes, and the entire population will be in great danger in the Spring if the potato crop does not last out. It is almost unfair to those who are unable to spare the time for hoarding trips. By order of the War Food Board it will, therefore, be necessary to combat not only professional illicit trading but also the so-called illicit supply, and to punish offenders and to confiscate the goods."

In Austria illicit trade in food has been worse than in Germany. In an article on food conditions in Austria last Summer by Alfred Maylander, to appear in the forthcoming issue of the Monthly Labor Review, issued by the Department of Labor, is quoted the following from the Arbeiter-Zeitung, a leading paper of Vienna:

"About one-tenth of the population of Vienna is engaged in the knapsack trade in potatoes and a very profitable trade it is, thanks to the reward offered by illicit dealers, hotels, restaurants, private hospitals, and persons of means. 'Knapsack tourists' are a perfect plague on the railways, where traveling was sufficiently difficult without them. * * * The authorities must cease to be so complaisant to the wishes of the moneyed classes and have some consideration for the mass of the people."

These are but a few of the instances, drawn from German and Austrian records now becoming available, showing how Germany's food control machine created a larger and larger army of illicit traders—food bootleggers—who, induced by the gains which the machine made possible, worked to divert food from those who needed it most to sustain them in daily toil, to those who had the most to pay for it, consequent on the widespread profiteering.

How the Biggest Thing in Life Almost Passed Me By

The Story of a Man Who Thought of Himself as a Success and Learned His Mistake in Time to Achieve a Real Success

IF any one had told me six months ago that I was completely losing out on the principal thing that makes life worth living I don't know whether I would have been indignant or amused.

I suppose that the average man whose credit at the butcher's and the grocer's is A-1, whose income from year to year keeps a jump ahead of his expenses, leaving a bit over to be applied on an accumulating bank account after the needs of the family have all been met, thinks of himself, quite privately, as a success.

Without ever having debated the question with myself or even thought about it I had reached that successful attitude of mind.

I neither walked to save car fare nor trolleyed to save taxi fare. My wife and I kept up with the theatres, entertained our friends, traveled a little and lived just about the life of the average family whose income has a limit, and who keep the future in mind when planning their expenditures.

After a period of such complacency it is a pretty severe jolt to be brought up short with the realization that you are "missing something," and that you have missed "something" without which no life is successful.

The New Employee

A few months ago a young man that had made a remarkable record with another firm was added to our force at a salary that seemed to me high for a man of his years.

I made it a point of meeting him on the morning he came to work for us. A day or two later, as a matter of courtesy, I asked him to lunch with me.

From the first he proved to be excellent company. I was only too glad to let him lead the conversation. He seemed to be perfectly at home on any subject, and talked with an easy flow of language of which I was frankly envious.

This young man, who had made a place for himself in the business world far above that of most men of his age, had in a short conversation given me a peep into a world to which I was a stranger.

It seemed to me that very little had escaped him. He spoke of literature and its creators, seeming to have a fine discrimination in judging the merits of various authors, few of whose names I had ever heard. He seemed perfectly at home in the spheres of science, nature and art. He was familiar with the customs of life in foreign countries—places that I would have difficulty in locating on the map. When he touched upon political events he drew parallels between the present situations of various world powers and similar conditions in history, drawing conclusions from his comparisons that have since seemed to me little less than prophetic. And his conversation was so well phrased and so graceful that I had no desire other than to listen to him. I had never met so interesting a man.

I put him down as a student and traveller, who after a university education had been able to spend a few years in cultivating an appreciation for and a knowledge of the things in life that leisure and money permit one to enjoy.

At my invitation he and his wife called at our home not long afterward. In the course of the evening I asked him, casually, about his earlier life and education.

A Discovery

"I was forced to drop school when I was 16 years old," he said. "My parents' circumstances at the time demanded that I go to work, and I have been working steadily ever since.

"During my early years in business it seemed to me that there was not much hope for a man whose education was as limited as mine. I felt at a disadvantage in the presence of men that had built a mental background through education. They lived and moved in a world of pleasure from which I seemed to be barred. They were at home under any circumstances, and their broader view of life as well as their ease and fluency in talking marked them as men that were bound to succeed. They had personality.

"I would never be able to go to school again,—I knew that,—and the fact was a continual source of grief to me up to the time I learned of the Mentor Association and its work.

"I became a member at once. Whatever I have gained in the way of broadened viewpoint and familiarity with the best things the world offers and the ability to meet men of university training on an equal plane I owe to my membership in the Mentor Association. With its help I make a point of learning one new thing each day and it is really marvelous how much ground a man can cover in this way."

Before our guests left that evening I found out more about the Mentor Association, and shortly afterward joined it myself. I have said that I thought of myself as a success. As I look back on it I realize also that I had been rather scornful of "higher education" and had somewhat prided myself on being a self-made man.

During the few months that I have been a member of the Mentor Association my views have changed decidedly, including my idea of success. Mental and social pleasure that I never knew existed have opened up before me. The ability to talk of things other than business has led me to increasingly wider acquaintance. The five minutes or so a day that I devote to acquiring a grasp of really golden knowledge has become a dollars and cents asset to me. I believe that I have at last the right to think of myself as a success, not only in business but in the art of living and in getting the full enjoyment and profit out of every day. Moreover, I am equipped with a broader viewpoint and a valuable self-possession. But for a chance acquaintance the biggest thing in life would have passed me by.

What Membership Brings

Membership in the Mentor Association entitles you to five valuable services:

First—24 issues of "The Mentor," bringing a beautifully printed and illustrated story every two weeks, all about one subject, written by a leading authority on that subject—300 pages during the year.

Second—600 beautiful illustrations, distributed during the year through the text of the 24 issues of "The Mentor."

Third—144 gravure or color pictures reproduced on heavy paper for framing, in deep rich tones that bring out all the beauty of the originals. If you bought these in an art store they would cost you from 50c to $1.00 each. On the back of each picture is a crisp, five minute description of the subject that is portrayed.

Fourth—Answers to any question on Art, Travel, Literature, History, Nature, and other departments of knowledge.

Fifth—Authoritative Club Programs. Any program you want for a club, a reading circle, a literary afternoon or evening. Your entire club program will be outlined for the year.

Only About 1c a Day

One of the most attractive things about the Mentor service is its extremely low price. Were this information to be prepared especially for you it would cost thousands of dollars, but because the expense is distributed among many the cost to each is trifling—a little over a cent a day! You may examine The Mentor carefully before sending any money, and if you are not entirely satisfied your membership will be cancelled if you notify us within ten days. Otherwise send only $4 on receipt of bill for the yearly membership. This is a special and limited offer and may not appear here again. Mail the coupon today. You will surely do so if you realize the value of this offer. Mail the Coupon now while you think of it.

A NEW STORY BY NORWAY'S GREAT NOVELIST

"The Great Hunger," the First Novel of Johan Bojer, Novelist, Translated Into English —Latest Fiction by Mr. Rideout, Alma Newton, Holworthy Hall, and Others

THE GREAT HUNGER. By Johan Bojer. Translated from the Norwegian by W. J. Alexander Worster and C. Archer. New York: Moffatt, Yard & Co. $1.60.

THE hunger of the hero of this novel is the "hunger for eternity," which inclines certain temperaments to despair or satisfaction. Such people are so appalled and hurt by the spectacle of the injustice and aimless cruelty of life that, unless they can find some answer to the prodding questions that beset them, they become wandering souls. Always Peer Holm, the hero of this novel, is putting questions to himself, to life, "What is it we are all after? Where are we going?" Even as a boy in the technical school he kept asking himself these questions:

> Where are you heading for, Peer? What are you aiming at in all your labors? And he would try to answer devoutly, as at evening prayers, Where? Why, of course, I am going to be a great engineer. And then? I will be one of the sons of Prometheus, that head and revolt against the tyranny of Heaven. And then? I will help to raise the great ladder on which men can climb aloft—higher and higher, up toward the light, and the spirit, and mastery over nature. And then? Live happily, marry and have children, and a rich and beautiful home. And then? Oh, well, one fine day, of course, one must grow old and die. And then? And then? Aye, what then?

In this novel the hero really comes to comprehension, understanding. He achieves the Promethean eminence of his boyish dreams. But he does it not through his beloved science, bridge building. He wins it when he stands upon the ruins of his life, upon the outermost edges of suffering.

When he has found his calling he works furiously. But behind all his work there is the effort "to understand God." He goes to Egypt and builds the great Nile barrage. He comes back to Norway rich and famous. Prometheus would seem to have harnessed the fire at last. He has irrigated vast regions, made it possible for millions more to live upon the earth. But in a talk with an admiring countryman he utters a searching criticism of all this activity.

The Prometheus of science has failed to appease the engineer's hunger for eternity. It is another illusion laid away. But then love comes to him, transfiguring the universe. Peer marries and achieves a second happiness. But to the Peers serenity is impossible. While sitting at dinner with his wife, champagne glass in hand, he reflects on the unnumbered dead moldering in the valley of the Nile, the flickering transience of human life.

Disaster comes. Peer loses his fortune and almost his reason. With his family he goes to a farm to recover his health. He lives on charity. In the end he becomes a blacksmith, working in a forge, he, the builder of the Nile barrage. He is forced to send his children to relatives of his wife's, all but the youngest, Asta. The child is killed by a dog belonging to a churlish neighbor. A drought comes and Peer rises in the night to sow his neighbor's field with part of his own slender stock. The book closes with a letter from Peer to a friend which is a paean to the unconquerable in man:

> Ah, if you had known that moment! It was as if the air about me grew alive with voices. It was as though all the unfortunates I had seen and known were bearing me company; more and more they came; the dead, too, were joined to us, an army from times past and long ago. * * * We are flung by the indifferent law of the universe into a life that we cannot order as we would; we are ravaged by injustice, by sickness and sorrow, by fire and blood. * * * And yet man smiles and laughs in the face of his tragic fate. In the midst of his thralldom he has created the beautiful on earth; in the midst of his torments he has had so much surplus energy of soul that he has sent it radiating forth into the cold deeps of space and warmed them with God.

This is a worthy ending to a novel that has simplicity and depth.

"TIN COWRIE DASS"

TIN COWRIE DASS. By Henry Milner Rideout. Duffield & Co. $1.25.

A NEW novel by Mr. Rideout is always a welcome, for he is one of the few able to weave with words a veritable magic carpet—a carpet which carries us smoothly and swiftly out of the workaday world and into the land of romance. Traveling thence under his guidance, we meet gay and gallant youths, who are not the carved wooden puppets of the average adventure story, but real flesh-and-blood young men, courageous and quick-witted and endowed with that most desirable of possessions, a sense of humor. As its title implies, this new and very colorful tale has its scene laid in India. Of the ingenious and fantastic plot we do not intend to reveal anything, save the fact that it takes us from a very humble bungalow on the shores of the Brahmaputra to a King's palace where are gorgeous guards and many glittering jewels and a superb throne of ivory, carved into finest lacework. Between these two extremes, with one of which the book opens, while with the other it ends, there come an old hulk on the river, a desert place amid sand hills, a lodging in Calcutta, the temporary but magnificent residence of a very great man, a dreary village of mud houses which was "an outpost on the boundary of silence," a journey on camel back, and a wayside inn, where a long-deferred meeting took place and many strange things happened.

"Tin Cowrie Dass" was not the real name of the lean, clear-eyed young Mohammedan who lived with his half-witted brother, nicknamed "The Dog," in the bungalow on the banks of the Brahmaputra. It was one he presently assumed, and that for very good reasons, since he was in a rather singular and very dangerous predicament, and it was the one he gave to that very clever and very likable young Englishman, Captain Weatherby, when chance and their own courage first brought them together. "Tin Cowrie Dass" is, of course, the leading character in the book, a hero with whom the reader sympathizes during his troubles and rejoices when well-earned good fortune at last comes to him. Captain Weatherby, quiet and humorous, who was considered an idler and was in truth a very important member of the police, is another real and delightful individual of whose adventures we would like to know more, while the young woman who was called "The Lady-Bird" is at least brave and enterprising and energetic, whatever a rigid moralist might think of her little failings.

The story moves swiftly, and is told in an easy, graphic style very pleasant to read. While the narrative is never permitted to drag, the book contains many vivid pen-pictures of India, pictures which give the tale an appropriate background and help the reader to believe in the extraordinary adventures of him who for a time was known only as "Tin Cowrie Dass."

THE BLUE STRING

THE BLUE STRING. By Alma Newton. New York: Duffield & Co. $1.50.

THIS new volume by Alma Newton marks a distinct development over her earlier work. Judging by the latter, she is a writer with a fondness for what is usually and somewhat vaguely called mysticism. In this book she is bringing her mysticism into a vital relation with the life about her. The reason that some people are impatient with the savor of "mysticism," "aestheticism," and the rest of the "isms," is because very often the devotees of these cults—if they are cults—are isolated spirits, dwelling in ivory towers. They shrink from the ugliness and stridency of modern life and dwell in places apart, detached from the world about them. In the Middle Ages this was considered right; mystics were called holy men, and numbers of them went to lonely places and lived on herbs and cultivated their souls in meditation. Nowadays we are apt to call that manner of living not holiness but cowardice. This is because, as Charles W. Eliot pointed out in his "Religion of the Future," we are living in a time when there is alive in the world a keen consciousness of social responsibility. The modern mystic, who is in tune with the spirit of the age, does not turn his back upon the world to cultivate his soul. He is more likely to start a home for poverty-stricken cancer patients. Now Alma Newton's earlier books, "The Love Letters of a Mystic" and "Memories,"

FOUR FAMOUS PEOPLE OF VICTORIAN ERA

Mr. Strachey's "Eminent Victorians"—A Careful Study of Gladstone, Florence Nightingale, Cardinal Manning, General Gordon, and Dr. Arnold

By ASHLEY H. THORNDIKE,
Professor of English, Columbia University.

EMINENT VICTORIANS. By Lytton Strachey. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE four Victorians that Mr. Strachey has chosen to write about are certainly eminent. Cardinal Manning, Florence Nightingale, Dr. Arnold, and General Gordon are perhaps not among the greatest figures of the last century, but they are among the most revered. They are on the list of the Victorian saints. Now Mr. Strachey appears and inquires, Were they really so good and noble and heroic as they seemed? He perceives that myths are already gathering about their names, and he proceeds to demolish the myths. Or, rather, he asks, Isn't the real man or woman more interesting than the imaginary saint?

All Victorians, with the exception of Disraeli, appear to have been very serious-minded, and they consequently have left themselves open to the attack of a witty twentieth century realist like Mr. Strachey. His four worthies unquestionably took themselves very seriously. What humor they had they expended on the follies and mishaps of their foes; they never applied it to themselves. They had great tasks to perform and they were all diligent servants of the Lord, but their implacable solemnity tempts one to welcome a little gossip about their behavior when off duty. Mr. Strachey has not spared them. He has collected all the evidence against their sainthood and has supplied that humorous view of their seriousness which they lacked. And a wicked world will learn, not without interest, that Dr. Arnold, a hero endeared to every one by "Tom Brown's Schooldays," was really a bit pompous and muddle-headed, and that Florence Nightingale, the Lady with the Lamp, was shrewish and very sarcastic. Cardinal Manning, that venerable ascetic, appears as a politician so unscrupulous in his craft that he nearly tricked Newman out of his Cardinal's hat. General Gordon, that Christian hero, at times paid his devotions to the brandy bottle as well as to his Bible. Here is a scene from his first expedition in the Soudan, when, after his fashion, he had shut himself up in his tent for days with a flag and a hatchet at the door to indicate that he was not to be disturbed for any reason whatever.

> During one of these retirements, there was grave danger of a native attack upon the camp. Colonel Long, the Chief of Staff, ventured, after some hesitation, to ignore the flag and hatchet, and to enter the forbidden tent. He found Gordon seated at a table, upon which were an open Bible and an open bottle of brandy. Long explained the circumstances, but could obtain no answer beyond the abrupt words, "You are commander of the camp," and was obliged to retire, nonplussed, to deal with the situation as best he could. On the following morning Gordon, cleanly shaven, and in the full-dress uniform of the Royal Engineers, entered Long's hut with his usual tripping step, exclaiming: "Old fellow, now don't be angry with me. I was very low last night. Let's have a good breakfast—a little b. and s. Do you feel up to it?"

These four Victorians were not only pious, they were all theologians. They searched the Scriptures, worried over doctrines, and finally established a close relationship with the Deity. They humbled themselves before God, but before no one else. Their biographer, indeed, hints that they found a certain satisfaction in expending all their humility in their private devotions with their Maker. Before their fellow-men they appeared armed as the chosen of God, serene in the witness of the Spirit. There were prayers and humiliations and struggles with conscience in secret, but when they had once persuaded God that their way was acceptable in his sight they acted in public as became those who were Jehovah's chosen ministers. Arnold, in the pulpit of Rugby Chapel, preaching to the little boys about the evil of their ways; Manning at 84, feeble in body but still dictating every detail in the government of his diocese; Florence Nightingale on her invalid's couch driving poor Sidney Herbert to death in an effort to reform the War Office, and Gordon, alone in Khartoum, defying the Government, scribbling taunts and caricatures for his superiors, and holding in awe the garrison and the population through the months of fearful famine—you could as easily stop the Archangel Gabriel as one of these. They may not have been models of perfection, but they possessed indomitable wills.

It must not be thought, however, that Mr. Strachey shows only the less likable side of his Victorians. He shows all their sides. And they had moments when they win nothing but sympathy and admiration. We like Dr. Arnold best when, divested of his divinity gown, he goes on all-fours upon the floor, playing with his children. We see Miss Nightingale not only as a marvelously efficient administrator, but as a very angel of light and healing.

> Wherever, in those vast wards, suffering was at its worst and the need for help was the greatest, there, as if by magic, was Miss Nightingale. Her superhuman equanimity would, at the moment of some ghastly operation, nerve the victim to endure and almost hope. Her mere passage brought with it a strange influence. A passionate idolatry spread among the men; they kissed her shadow as it passed.

Manning's greatest moment was, perhaps, when, after all other conciliators failed, at 83 years of age he won over the dock strikers. "Unaccustomed tears glistened in the eyes of his rough and work-stained hearers as the Cardinal raised his hand and solemnly urged them not to prolong one moment more than they could help the perilous uncertainty and the sufferings of their wives and children." As for Gordon, his greatest moment was his last. The defense had collapsed and the Mahdi's followers were swarming into gave the reader a sense that their author had not yet discovered her world. She had discovered the world of the mediaeval saints, but she had not brought the discovery to bear on the life about her. In her new volume she escapes this charge. It is significant that the scene of her first book is in Capri, while that of the title story of her last is in the subway. In the first book the hero plays the violin and writes love letters at midnight after exquisite dinners in an Italian villa; in "The Blue String" the heroine dies of anaemia, which is a polite name for starvation.

In this first sketch, "The Blue String," the author has done a tender and exquisite thing. It is very short, but nevertheless she has conveyed her meaning delicately and completely through suggestion. Her writing shows increased maturity, simplicity, depth. In the dialogue between the priest and the lady over the body of the dying girl, there is something solemn, antiphonal. This sketch gives an indication of what its author will accomplish when she has looked more closely at the things about her.

Another admirable sketch is "The Dawn," a dialogue between a mother and a dying child. The child, because it is a child, is more sensitive than the mother. The dialogue has a Maeterlinckian sound:

The Mother: What do you see, my child?
The Child: Just what you see, mother.
The Mother: Are you sure?
The Child: Why not?
The Mother: Because you are a clairvoyant, my little one.
The Child: What is that, mother? Is it something queer?
The Mother: No, no, it is something beautiful. You see things that others cannot see.
The Child: Why do you tell me such things, mother; is it because I am dying?
The Mother: Hush, my little one, no one ever dies.

In "The Artist and the Materialist," a dialogue suggesting Wilde's "The Critic as Artist," the author expresses some of her ideas concerning art and literature. "Novena" contains an illuminating plaint by a girl who is tired of "dream lovers, etheric ties," and wants more tangible "realization." It indicates the author's advance in the understanding of character that she should be able to visualize so convincingly a mental attitude different from her own. It is one of the many evidences, indeed, that "The Blue String" contains of the author's deepened and more assured grasp both on life and on her literary medium.

THE MAN NOBODY KNEW

THE MAN NOBODY KNEW. By Holworthy Hall. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

MR. HALL, who has written more stories than Lope de Vega wrote plays, is naturally sometimes hard pushed for ideas. He is forced into the bizarre and the preposterous to keep the mill grinding. In this latest novel he has rather outdone himself in achieving the unlikely. The hero, one Hillard, hails from Syracuse, N. Y. A son of a splendid father, he makes himself notorious through drinking and general unreliability. In a burst of petulance he joins the Foreign Legion. On the first day in the trenches he is severely wounded and taken to the hospital. The formula has become familiar. Why is it that in our plays and novels the war has been used chiefly as a lever for the regeneration of rotters?

But Mr. Hall gives his story a fillip that has what the magazines consider the merit of novelty. The hero's face has to be made over. He hates his own, so he cynically gives the surgeons as a model for his new one a postcard picture of Rembrandt's Christ. The surgeons dutifully use it. The erstwhile wastrel is henceforward described as follows:

He was anywhere from 25 to 40, this American from the distant trenches, and his age was as hard to guess as a clever woman's; there was something about him peculiar to youth, and yet when his face was in repose he might easily have claimed twoscore of years and gone undisputed. It was a face which suggested both the fire of immaturity and the drain of experience; there was a breath-taking gravity about it, a hint of the dignity of marble, of ageless permanence. It was a slightly thin face, scarred by a heavy line or two, and indelibly stamped with the evidence of intense thought and inward suffering.

Despite the "evidence of intense thought" with which Hillard's face was marked he immediately (on the boat coming back to America) becomes a victim of a most barefaced and obvious schemer, one Harmon, a conventionalized portrait of a boisterous American stock broker. This gentleman wants some one to stick a mining stock for him, and, though he has not hitherto been able to get any one to sell it, he feels sure that Hillard can. By a happy coincidence the particular place he wants him to sell the stock is Syracuse, N. Y.; it seems that the business men of that town are particularly insensitive to large opportunities. Hillard, without looking into the value of Harmon's mine for a moment, accepts.

He goes back to Syracuse, where no one recognizes him. He sells the stock to all his friends, believing it to be honest. It turns out to be fake. He is in despair. But the reader need not be. The stock turns out to be all right, by accident. And he marries the girl with whom he had been in love before, who knew who he really was all the time. Even a preposterous story may be a good yarn. But when it is clogged with sentimentality at every turn and defaced by the sort of tactlessness which inspired the Christ episode, it becomes difficult reading. Why would not one of the Pagan gods, Zeus or Hermes, have done for Hilliard? Even Van Dyke's Charles I. might have done him justice.

the palace. Gordon had time only to slip on a white uniform and meet them at the head of the staircase. No one knows exactly what happened, but at the foot of the stairs his body was found among a heap of corpses.

There is every temptation to quote from this volume, for it abounds in striking stories and brilliant interpretations. Perhaps the most remarkable passages in the extraordinarily clever book are those in which the author analyzes the characters of the three statesmen most intimately concerned in Gordon's fate—Gladstone, Sir Evelyn Baring, and Lord Hartington. The portraits are masterpieces that must be read in their entirety to be appreciated, but a single detail may be given from the picture of Lord Hartington, whom the English people trusted.

Above all, they loved him for being dull. It was the greatest comfort—with Lord Hartington they could always be absolutely certain that he would never, in any circumstances, be either brilliant, or subtle, or surprising, or impassioned, or profound. As they sat listening to his speeches, in which considerations of stolid plainness succeeded one another with complete flatness, they felt, involved and supported by the colossal tedium, that their confidence was finally assured. They looked up and took their fill of the sturdy obvious presence. The inheritor of a splendid dukedom might almost have passed for a farm hand. Almost, but not quite. For an air that was difficult to explain, of preponderating authority, lurked in the solid figure; and the lordly breeding of the House of Cavendish was visible in the large, long, bearded, unimpressionable face.

Mr. Strachey has not written history in the usual fashion, but he has made a notable contribution to that prodigious and impossible undertaking, the history of the Victorian Age. His four eminent personages were chosen for their points of difference rather than from their likeness; yet, as has been suggested, in essentials of character they resemble one another, and they reveal Victorian limitations and excellencies. They possessed in superabundance that energy which Matthew Arnold thought so characteristic of the English, and they were wanting in that openness of mind and flexibility of intelligence which he found among his French rather than his English contemporaries. All four did their utmost to make the will of God prevail, but each had a closed mind as to what the will of God was. But if they had lived more wisely, would they have lived as well? At least we may doubt if they would have made as good subjects for biography.

"We do not reflect," observes Mr. Strachey, "that it is perhaps as difficult to write a good life as to live one." In an interesting preface he derides our customary two-volume biographies, "with their ill-digested masses of material, their slipshod style, their tone of tedious panegyric, their lamentable lack of selection, of detachment, of design." These are the faults he has avoided. He paints his portraits with penetrating insight and iconoclastic irony, and with a style that has all the energy of the Victorians and the flexibility and wit of the French. But he will admit no romantic enthusiasm. That quality his readers must supply for themselves; and, after all, it is a quality needed if one is to understand completely the hero of Khartoum or the Lady with the Lamp.

Historic Mackinac

A story of absorbing interest is well told by Edward O. Wood in "Historic Mackinac," an illustrated work that appears in two large and handsome volumes. In his first volume the author does full justice to the early history of Mackinac, of which he has been a student for many years, with exceptional opportunities for research; in his second volume he presents notable references to Mackinac Island, taken from the writings of celebrated travelers who have described the island and dealt with its history and legends. At the end of the second volume appear a chronology, a complete bibliography, and an admirable index. (Macmillan Company. $12.50.)

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

E. A. BAILEY.—I have in my possession a New England Primer dated 1822, published in New York by D. D. Smith, at the Franklin Juvenile Book Store, 190 Greenwich Street. The primer belonged to my grandfather, Eli Hale, who was born in 1791. In order to preserve the book, it has a cover of newspaper, probably about the same date as the primer. This small piece of newspaper contains several very interesting items, one of which reads as follows:

"The New York Times is suspended for a short time. The editor states the new Journal of Commerce has injured him, and intimates that it has been done unfairly. We have always regarded The Times as a respectable paper."

Does this item refer to the present New York Times?

The New England Primer of the date mentioned is worth about $6. The New York Times mentioned in the newspaper is not the present New York Times, which did not come into existence until 1851.

"England"

HAZEL SIMON.—Can you kindly tell me in what book I can find the poem which commences "England, with all thy faults I love thee still"?

The poem asked for is by William Cowper, the English poet, and may be found in "The Task," Book II. It is printed in the World's Best Poetry, Vol. VIII, and in many collections of British poetry.

"Tales of My Landlord"

W. H. W. CRISPO.—I have in my possession two volumes of "The Highlander; or, Tales of My Landlord," published by A. K. Newman, Leadenhall Street, London, 1819, which I am told is one of the first works of Sir Walter Scott. If so, what value would they be?

"Tales of My Landlord," by Sir Walter Scott, third series, four volumes, Edinburgh, 1819, is worth about $6. The London edition of the same year is not of special value.

House by the Road

D. F. M.—Can you tell me the author of the poem, "The House by the Road," the first two lines being:

Let me live in the house by the side of the road,
Where the race of men go by?

The author of this well-known poem was Sam Walter Foss, a New England poet and writer, who from 1898 until his death in 1911 was librarian of the Public Library at Somerville, Mass.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

MRS. GEORGE D. MAYO.—In answer to Mrs. S. D. Cox's inquiry as to the author and complete poem beginning:

I am very happy to say it was written by my young son, George Morrow Mayo, who is serving in the United States Navy in anti-submarine work, having volunteered the day after war was declared.

When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of Grant be with you all
As the sons of the North advance.

And here's to the gray of the sun-kissed South,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of Lee be with you all
As the sons of the South advance.

And here's to the Blue and Gray as one,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the Spirit of God be with you all
As the sons of the Flag advance.

"Richard Carvel"

J. C. WOOD.—In THE BOOK REVIEW of Dec. 29 Elise S. Littlejohn desired to know where the following quotation could be found. It is the concluding paragraph of Winston Churchill's novel, "Richard Carvel":

The war for Independence was won. I pray God that time may soften the bitterness it caused and heal the breach in that noble race whose motto is Freedom; that the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack may some day float together to cleanse this world of tyranny.

The Fox and the Owl

Mrs. ROBERT ROBERTSON.—The book which V. M. Turner asked for in THE BOOK REVIEW of Dec. 29 has been a cherished possession of mine for fifty years—one of the happy recollections of my childhood. Its name is "The Fox and the Owl." Aunt Matilda series, and McLaughlin & Co., publishers, New York. It is probably now out of print.

Information about this poem, which is much too long to print in this column, has been received from Mrs. Daniel G. Clark, Ithaca, N. Y.; K. M. Johnson, New York; Mrs. Edward D. Wilf, Englewood, N. J.; Mrs. H. C. Adams, New York, and Mrs. E. H. Churchill, Connecticut.

APPEALS TO READERS

J. C. M.—Looking through a diary for the year 1882 recently I came across the lines copied below, which appeared without name or reference. The writing being rather illegible they may not be quite correctly given. Perhaps one of your readers may be able to give the correct version, with the name of the poem and of the author:

We seem to tread the self-same street,
To pace the self-same court or grass;
Parting, our hands appear to meet;
O vanitatum vanitas!

"Life Leaves"

J. L. M.—I shall be greatly obliged if any of your readers would give me the name of the author of a poem the title of which I know as "Life Leaves," the first stanza of which is:

The day, with its sandals dipped in dew,
Has passed thro' the evening's golden gates,
And a single star in the cloudless blue
For the rising moon in silence waits,
While the wind that sighs to the languid hours
A lullaby breathes o'er the folded flowers.

Fair Sorrento

HENRY D. PIERCE.—I am anxious to obtain a copy of a poem which I heard quoted many years ago. The first verse ran something like this:

On the hills of fair Sorrento
* * * *
Where the maiden,
Flower laden,
Bears his arrows in her eyes.
* * * *
While the steamers,
With their streamers,
Bear the dreamers
Out to sea.

Perhaps some reader may be able to furnish the entire poem.

The Lone Shealing

A. L. W.—May I ask some reader where I can find the poem of which the following is the first verse:

From the lone shealing on the misty island
Mountains divide us and a world of seas,
But still the blood is strong, the heart is Highland,
And we in dreams behold the Hebrides.

It is often quoted, but I cannot find it.

"House of Dreams"

J. F. DAWSON.—Would appreciate it greatly if some reader could furnish me with the poem "My Little House of Dreams."

Sobbing Drums

WILLIAM C. HARPINGTON.—Can some reader tell me where I can find a Decoration Day poem beginning:

Sobbing drums, solemn and slow,
Beating time when the old men go,
Withered skins, faltering feet,
* * * * *

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

THE new, uniform American edition of Leonard Merrick's books which E. P. Dutton & Co. last year announced they would undertake will be initiated by them next month with the publication of "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," with an introduction by Sir J. M. Barrie. The unique feature of the edition, aside from the fact that it is newly set and printed in America, will be the introduction each volume will have by some distinguished English or American novelist. As there will be, at the start, twelve volumes, Mr. Merrick will thus be tried by a full jury of his peers. Succeeding volumes, which will appear at short intervals, will be as follows: "When Love Flies Out of the Window," with an introduction by Sir William Robertson Nicoll; "The Quaint Companions," introduction by H. G. Wells; "The Position of Peggy Harper," introduction by Sir Arthur Pinero; "The Man Who Understood Women," introduction by W. J. Locke; "The Actor Manager," introduction by William Dean Howells; "The Worldlings," introduction by Neil Munro; "Cynthia," introduction by Maurice Hewlett; "One Man's View," introduction by Granville Barker; "The Man Who Was Good," introduction by J. K. Prothero. These will all be published in a limited edition of 1,500 each. In addition, the Duttons will bring out this week, as a sort of advance courier, Mr. Merrick's latest book, "When Paris Laughed," postponed from last Summer, which at some future time will be provided with an introduction and added to the uniform edition. It is a collection of short stories dealing with life in Paris in the years before the war.

"From Sunup to Sundown," written in collaboration by Corra Harris and her daughter, Faith Harris Leech, which Doubleday, Page & Co. announce for early Spring publication, will be a novel about the endeavor of a young lawyer and his wife to run a farm without practical knowledge. It is said to show ample evidence of Mrs. Harris's well-known gifts of ironic humor and clever phraseology.

The Putnams have ready the second volume of the Cambridge History of American Literature. It takes up the early writers of drama and essays, Cooper and his contemporaries in fiction, the authors who were more or less allied with the Transcendental School, the poets, publicists, orators, historians and other writers, and the magazines, annuals and newspapers to the middle of the last century. The third volume, to be published some time in the future, will complete the history down to the end of the century.

The year that has just begun is the centenary anniversary of a striking list of famous American authors. In 1819 were born Walt Whitman, James Russell Lowell, Julia Ward Howe, Susan Warner, J. G. Holland, Charles A. Dana, who created a newspaper even if he did not write a book. The double decade of which 1819 was the closing year saw the birth of so many other American authors of renown—Emerson, Thoreau, Whittier, Longfellow, Alcot, Hawthorne, Beecher, Mrs. Stowe, to say nothing of the great statesmen of the last century whose eyes first opened during that same period—that the question at once springs up as to why there should have been such a flowering of talent and of genius out of that twenty years when succeeding ones were so barren—whether there were physical or moral conditions preceding the birth or attending the childhood of that generation which produced or stimulated mental energy.

The story of his life, "Hitting the Dark Trail, by Clarence Hawkes, blind author and lecturer, has been issued in three kinds of raised print for the blind, and is being used much at base and convalescent hospitals and educational institutions for blind soldiers, both in the United States and in England. Mr. Hawkes, who was blinded in his early teens, tells in his book how he enjoys many things which most people suppose require full eyesight for their appreciation, such as a baseball game, which is one of his particular enjoyments; travel, beautiful weather, and fine scenery.

Henry Kitchell Webster, of whose many novels "An American Family" was the last, has recently sailed for England, where he will represent as correspondent a daily paper and a monthly magazine. He expects to be gone for six months, and will visit France and Belgium before he returns.

The George H. Doran Company will publish this week Charles Hansen Town's "Shaking Hands with England," an account of his visit to that country last Summer with a party of editors and authors, the purpose of whose going was to better acquaintance, clarify understanding, and strengthen friendship between the two countries.

There has just been organized in Italy, at Rome, an association named the "Library for American Studies in Italy," whose purpose is to establish a library in that city which shall contain the best books on the history, literature, art, and all the political and social institutions of the United States for the use of any one in Italy wishing to know and to spread knowledge about this country. The first trustees of the association are the American Ambassador to Italy, ex officio, James Byrne of New York, and H. Nelson Gay of Boston. The American Ambassador to Italy, or in his absence the highest official of the embassy, will always be one of the trustees. The association will receive gifts of money, books, and other things useful for its purpose. The organizers of the association hope that through it a better understanding of this country may be disseminated in Italy.

The Goncourt Prize for 1918 has just been awarded to a book entitled "Civilization," written by Dr. Georges Duhamel, which the Century Company will publish sometime this Spring. It is a collection of short sketches about the war. The author was for four years on the staff of a hospital just back of the French front.

Lemcke & Buechner announce the early publication, following their "Entente Baedeker" and "Entente Almanach de Gotha," of an "Entente Minerva" from the press of Gauthier-Villars, in Paris. The German portion of the annual, of which this takes the place, which was published for twenty-five years in Strassburg, will not be included in this index of higher education. Information contained in it concerning non-French institutions will for the most part be given in the language of the country to which they belong.

For February publication the J. B. Lippincott Company announces a contribution to Lincolniana in the shape of a novel by Bernie Babcock, which will be called "The Soul of Ann Rutledge: Abraham Lincoln's Romance." The claim of the publishers is that "this is the first adequate story of one of the greatest loves in history."

Alfred A. Knopf announces that Joseph Hergesheimer's new novel, "Java Head," passed its 5,000 mark a little over a week after publication.

Francis Bowes Sayre's "Experiments in International Administration," which the Harpers will publish immediately, will describe the attempts at the formation of international leagues that have been made in the past. It will narrate the details of organization and the results of each of the three endeavors during the last two and a half centuries that European nations have made to obtain permanent peace. The author is at present teaching international and constitutional law in the Harvard Law School.

Hartley Burr Alexander, author of "Liberty and Democracy," has just been elected President of the American Philosophical Association.

Doubleday, Page & Co. announce that they have taken over from the H. K. Fly Company Captain Peter B. Kyne's earlier novels, "The Long Chance" and "Cappy Ricks," and now have on their list all of his books.

Among the Spring publications of Scribners will be "Seeing the National Parks," by Robert Sterling Yard, Chief of the Educational Division, National Park Service, and author of "The Top of the Continent." It will give authoritative information concerning the whole National Parks system, treating them historically, scenically, practically as resorts, educationally, and scientifically.

American Postal Service

A second edition has been published of Louis Mellus's "The American Postal Service." It contains matter that is not in the earlier edition. In its present form Mr. Mellus's book gives a good history of the Postal Service from the earliest times and a full description of this country's postal organization and methods. (Author, Washington, D. C.)

Sewing and Textiles

Annabel Turner, Instructor in Home Economics in the University of Wisconsin, has contributed to the Home Economics Series an illustrated volume entitled "Sewing and Textiles." She gives instruction in all kinds of plain sewing, darning, and patching, and practical information of use in buying cloths and in handling them. (D. Appleton & Co. $1.75.)

Songs of a Miner
James C. Welsh
12°. $1.25.

The author of these vigorous poems is himself a miner, for twenty-four years working in the pits of Lanarkshire. There is marked contrast in his work, poems of lace-like tracery; deep toned poems of the souls, whimsical poems of his countryland, and robust poems of action.

ENGLISH VERSION OF BOOK BY FABRE

THE SACRED BEETLE AND OTHERS. By J. H. Fabre. Translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.60.

THE Sacred Beetle was sedulously watched thousands of years before the Christian era, in the days of Rameses and Thotmes. As the fellah in the Valley of the Nile watered his patch of onions in the Spring, he would see from time to time a fat, black insect pass close by, hurriedly trundling a ball of camel dung backward. He would watch the queer rolling thing in amazement, even as the Provencal peasant watches it to this day.

No one fails to be surprised when he first finds himself in the presence of the Scarab, who, with his head down and his long hind legs in the air, pushes with might and main his huge pill, the source of so many awkward tumbles. Undoubtedly the simple fellah, on beholding this spectacle, wondered what that ball could be, what object the black creature could have in rolling it along with such vigor. The peasant of today asks himself the same question.

In the days of the Rameses and Thotmes, superstition had something to say in the matter; men saw in the rolling sphere an image of the world performing its daily revolution; and the Scarab received divine honors: in memory of his ancient glory he continues the Sacred Beetle of the modern naturalists.

Ancient Egypt used to say that the Scarab rolls his ball from east to west, the direction in which the world turns. It was thought that he buried it underground for twenty-eight days, because that was the period of lunary revolution. The four weeks' incubation quickened the pillmakers' progeny. On the twenty-ninth day, which the insect knew to be that of the conjunction of the sun and moon and of the birth of the world, he was supposed to go back to the buried ball, dig it up, open it and throw it into the Nile, thus completing the cycle. Immersion in the sacred waters caused a Scarab to emerge from the ball.

M. Fabre bids us not laugh superiorly at this ancient superstition. For the fundamental error, regarding as the Scarab's cradle the ball which we see rolling across the fields, still lingers in our textbooks. It was only after years of steady observation that the great naturalist became convinced that the beetle's burden contained no germs; they were merely rolled away as provision. This is not the only tradition Fabre punctures. Earlier observers (Blanchard, Illiger) had described several beetles pushing a pellet of food, and attributed this dual labor to cooperation. By means of ingenious experiment, M. Fabre disproves this; the beetle seems to have no instinct for co-operation whatever:

They are very far, however, from any such co-operation. Each pushes the ball, with all his might, I admit, but he pushes as if he were alone and seems to have no notion of the happy result that would follow a combined effort. . . . I introduced artificially a stoppage which is not really very different from those occurring naturally when the ball is being rolled amid the thousand and one irregularities of the ground; and the beetle behaves, in my experimental tests, as he would have behaved in any other circumstances in which I had no part. He uses his back as a wedge and a lever and pushes with his feet, without introducing anything new into his methods, even when he has a companion and can avail himself of his assistance.

This is the experience of most investigators when they put to animals tests which require what would seem to be the rudiments of a reasoning process rather than the simple working of instinct. The other volumes of the "Souvenirs Entomologiques" which have so far been published have been noted for the sheer excitement which M. Fabre is able to infuse into his records of the multitudinous lives of the tiny creatures whose doings he chronicles with such loving and humorous minuteness. In this regard "The Sacred Beetle" is no exception; one watches the progress of a beetle pushing a pellet of food over a perilous terrain with a tremulous eagerness; it is part of M. Fabre's genius that he is able to invest science with the heightened expectancy of crises in our own lives:

And now to work with a will! The thing moves, it begins to roll; we shall get there, though not without difficulty. Here is the first awkward place; the beetle is wending his way athwart a slope and the heavy mass tends to follow the incline; the insect, however, for reasons best known to himself, prefers to cut across this natural road, a bold project which may be brought to naught by a false step or by a grain of sand which disturbs the balance of the load. The false step is made; down goes the ball to the bottom of the valley; and the insect, toppled over by the shock, is lying on its back, kicking. It is soon up again and hastens to harness itself once more to its load. The machine works better than ever. But look out, you dunderhead! Follow the dip of the valley; that will save labor and mishaps; the road is good and level; your ball will roll quite easily. Not a bit of it! The beetle prepares once again to mount the slope that has already been his undoing.

The whole book partakes of this interest. It emanates from the author's passion for his subject, a sense that the translator has rendered unimpaired in his translation. One feels in these clear pages that one is reading French. It is a mistake to have called Fabre the "Homer of the insects"; better to have called him their Boswell.

Why?

"The demand comes not only from the hospitals but also from the 41 large United States camps; from 600 smaller camps, posts and stations; from the battleships, from the men overseas, where the American Library Association books are in service at over 200 distributing points."

This is from a letter from Carl H. Milan, assistant director of the A. L. A. He knows what the boys want.

The boys love Zane Grey because they feel a kinship with the people he writes about. Sunlight and starlight, sweet mountain winds and stinging sandstorms of the desert, the far horizon—the tremendous scale of things—and the savage cruelty of nature, have all left their marks upon Zane Grey's people. Their home is in the large spaces—among the Western trails—and now he has written a new book—of the Far West—of the yellow wheat fields—a book full of the drama of life. You will feel about him as the soldiers do when you read this big book.

THE CRITICS SAY THAT ALL THE BEST THAT HAS BEEN FELT OR WRITTEN ON THE WAR IS IMPLIED AND SURPASSED IN IBANEZ' VIVID NOVEL

The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse

Of this vivid novel, written from the international viewpoint, on the grand scale by one of the world's leading novelists, one critic says, "If you could create the traditional visitor from Mars to whom you wanted to give in one book an epitome of what had been written and felt of the war you could hand him 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.'" The reviewer goes on to enumerate what has been given to the world in many reports, stories of trench life, glimpses of devastation, diplomatic experiences, splendid tributes to Allied courage and endurance, and adds: "All of these are implied and surpassed in the book of the Spanish novelist." They are set in true proportion and given the vividness of young cosmopolitan life in Paris in this thoroughly enjoyable novel.

ROUSSEAU'S "LEAGUE"

STATESMEN, writers on political economy, educators—it would be difficult to measure, with any degree of accuracy, their indebtedness to that revolutionary thinker and visionary of the eighteenth century, JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU. It may be that his books are not so widely read today as they once were, and that they have been superseded to a great extent by the more brilliant, witty writing of his rival and successor, VOLTAIRE. But the ideas of ROUSSEAU seem to have a perennial hold on us. Their originator seems to have thought for a twentieth century world, and to have been as far as possible, in his sympathies and turn of mind, from a civilization that appeals to our interest largely because it is old and outworn. Now it is the League of Nations idea that a reader finds originates with the great French philosopher. ROUSSEAU first speaks of the "Project for Perpetual Peace" in his "Confessions," telling us that he derived it from the Abbé de SAINT-PIERRE, whose manuscripts had been placed in his hands. Later on he elaborated the "Project," called it a League of Nations, intended for the nineteen powers which he supposed would form the future "European Republic," and drew up these five articles by which these powers would be federated:

By the first, the contracting sovereigns will establish among them a perpetual and irrevocable alliance, and will nominate plenipotentiaries to hold, in a specified place, a permanent diet or congress, in which all disputes of the contracting parties will be arranged and terminated by way of arbitration or of decision.

By the second will be specified the number of sovereigns whose plenipotentiaries will have votes at the diet; those who will be invited to accede to the treaty; the order, time, and method by which the presidence will pass from one to the other at equal intervals; lastly, the relative quota of contributions to meet joint expenses and the method of raising them.

By the third, the confederation will guarantee to each of its members possession and government of all the States which it actually possesses, likewise the succession, elective or hereditary, according as everything is established by the fundamental laws of each country; and in order to suppress at once the source of disputes which continually recur, it will be desirable to take actual possession and the latest treaties as the basis of all the mutual rights of the contracting Powers, renouncing forever and reciprocally every other previous pretension; except future contentions, successions, and other rights that may become due, which will all be regulated by the arbitration of the diet, without leave to enforce a claim by violence or even to take up arms one against another under any pretext whatsoever.

By the fourth will be specified the cases in which any ally who infringes the treaty shall be placed under the ban of Europe and proscribed as a public enemy; namely, if he should refuse to execute the judgment of the Grand Alliance, should make warlike preparations, should negotiate treaties contrary to the confederation, or should take up arms either to resist it or to attack any of the Allies. It will be agreed by the same article that armed action will be taken, jointly and at common cost, against every State that is under the ban of Europe, until it has laid down arms, executed the judgments and regulations of the diet, repaired the injuries, refunded the costs, and expressed regret for the preparations of war contrary to the treaty.

Lastly, by the fifth, the plenipotentiaries of the European body will always have power to draw up in the diet, by a plurality of votes provisionally, and three months later by a three-fourths majority definitively, on the instructions of their courts, the regulations they will consider expedient for conferring on the European Republic and on each of its members all the advantages possible; but nothing shall ever be altered in these five fundamental articles except by the unanimous consent of the confederates.

SINCE the days of BJORNSON and IBSEN we have rarely had the opportunity to welcome something "literary," and of the first order, from Norway. JOHAN BOJER, a translation of whose novel, "The Great Hunger," reviewed elsewhere in these columns, has just appeared in this country, is a Norwegian scarcely known, even by name, to American readers, although in Norway he has held a place in the front rank of novelists for nearly thirty years. He shares the popularity of PETER EGGE and BURNT LIE, novelists who are equally unknown to the American public. When he first wrote BOJER was carried away with the Zola brand of realism that swept literary Europe in the eighties and early nineties, and his first novels were deeply touched by the French master's themes and methods. Latterly, however, BOJER has drifted into a sort of symbolic school of fiction, although his work is strongly realistic in tone. He is deeply imbued with the literary characteristic of his race, an intense seriousness that becomes a sort of habitual melancholy. He has been called, indeed, "the Cassandra of his race." Gloom, depression are not qualities that make for popularity in fiction—at least in this country—and it may be that this fact will stand in the way of anything like widespread appreciation of BOJER'S work with us. It is cheering to learn, however, that "The Great Hunger" is the least depressing of his novels, even if it is not exactly a light or humorous story.

ELVES AND FAIRIES

ELVES AND FAIRIES. Pictures by Ida Rentoul Outhwaite, Verses by Annie R. Rentoul. Edited by Grenbry Outhwaite. Melbourne, Australia: The Lothian Book Publishing Company.

OUT of the antipodes comes this big and beautiful book with its proof of what Australia can do in the way of verse, illustration, and bookmaking. A whimsical foreword by Archibald T. Strong of the University of Melbourne sets forth the claim that if the fairies long ago left England—he says the "last authentic Fairy recorded in England occurs in a Masque of Ben Jonson's"—they have found a new home among the oddly named trees and flowers of Australia, where the two authors of this volume have discovered them and sung and pictured their activities. And surely the Australian fairies are very difficult to please if they have not been greatly delighted by the portrayal of them made by these two ladies. Mrs. Outhwaite's pictures, of which there are forty-five in full-page plates, fifteen in color and the rest in black and white, show a high degree of skill, grace, and charm. The drawing is firm and true, the conceptions charming, and the figures strikingly graceful and pleasing. There is often a touch of humor or grotesquerie of the kind that brings a tender smile into the reader's heart as well as to his lips.

The poems by Miss Rentoul, of which there are sixty or more, companion the pictures most happily. Their simplicity of diction, their frequently quaint or gently humorous idea, and their melodious quality put them into that difficult land between childhood and maturity, so perfectly inhabited by Stevenson and by Riley in some of their poems, which can be equally enjoyed by both children and grown-ups. The opening poem, entitled "Moonrise," has three dainty stanzas, of which this is the first:

Moonrise comes,
Pushing through the ti-tree;
Moonrise comes,
With her wand of pearl;
Moonrise comes,
I can hear the Fairies;
Softer than a wattle-bud
Their wings unfurl.
Hush, hush, hush!
I can hear the Fairies;
Softer than a wattle-bud
Their wings uncurl.

And here is the first stanza of a fairy's speculations as, poised on a hillside, she looks down upon human habitations:

Down in the hollow, nestling deep,
The Mortals' Country lies;
And when the stars begin to peep
Like wild birds in the skies,
We see the mortal lights agleam
Behind the window bars;
Like songbirds in a cage they seem,
Poor little mortal stars.
Oh, are you happy, mortal lights,
Behind the bars on Summer nights?

The authentic note of originality which marks both pictures and verse, in addition to their grace, charm, and skill, makes one hope that these two talented Australians may become better known to American readers. The profits of the book are devoted to the Red Cross.

NATIONAL PROSPERITY

MANY conservationists lose sight of the fact that there is a debit as well as a credit to proposals otherwise admirable. Nobody opposes conservation if there is economy in it, but conservation may be so costly that our posterity cannot afford it. To destroy for use may be to increase profit. Thus to destroy forests for the sake of raising grain benefits posterity, which profits more from the grain than it would from the forests. The case is not the same with deposits which do not renew themselves, but which are reduced forever by whatever is taken from them. Yet if coal and other minerals are to be preserved for posterity, posterity must pay what it would cost to invest the capital which it would be necessary to use and the interest which must be paid on the capital. Conservation may be mere hoarding of resources with a view to exploiting the market, in which case it must be controlled by the police and taxing powers so as to destroy private profit at public cost. The case is still different with water power. In that case the waste is by nonuse. There is no reduction by use, nor any increase by nonuse; and the waste by the idleness of the flowing water is caused often by legislation designed to prevent private profit at public cost. The conclusion is that "there is a sharp limit to the economic sacrifice that we may reasonably and ethically ask the private person to make for even the present welfare, and the limit is still sharper when we come to consider the interests of future generations. When it is possible and as a general principle, social burdens should be socially diffused and socially borne." The cost of capital limits conservation in practice, and this explains a "temporary reaction due on the one hand to selfishness and ignorance, and on the other to the indiscretions, exaggerations, and other mistakes of certain conservationists." The influence of these competent writers will do much to correct the reaction which they remark.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, which deals with the aims and tasks of the writers on Jewish history, supplies a wealth of bibliographical information and a convenient grouping of related Jewish histories which are likely to make this essay popular. At the same time, its scientific outlook is by no means lost sight of. Max J. Kohler is represented by a lengthy and careful piece of laborious research, entitled "Jewish Rights at the Congresses of Vienna (1814-1815) and Aix-la-Chapelle, (1818.)" This paper discusses the subject of its title at great length and is of practical value at this juncture in the affairs of the world, for it shows how an important though subsidiary topic was considered at the great peace conferences of a century ago after Napoleon's power was broken.

With Mr. Kohler's essay we may bracket for timeliness Albert M. Hyamson's "British Projects for the Restoration of Jews to Palestine." In this we are informingly and entertainingly instructed in the facts of various attempts by non-Jewish individuals or organizations in Great Britain to re-establish the Jews in a State of their own in the Holy Land. These stretch between the early years of the nineteenth century and the last decade thereof, and are thus of much interest in connection with the recent declaration of the British Cabinet through Foreign Secretary Balfour on the same subject.

The remaining papers in this volume need not detain us. The influence of Jews, particularly of the Hebrew Bible, on the well-known Cotton Mather was profound, and Lee M. Friedman has gathered together the principal evidences thereof from Mather's diary. Leon Hühner lists the Jews who participated in the War of 1812. Daniel P. Hays supplies a brief biographical memoir of his ancestor, Daniel L. M. Peixotto, M. D., a celebrated New York physician of the early half of the nineteenth century, and Dr. Solomon Zeitlin discusses eruditely an abstruse question of chronology—the date of the surrender of Jerusalem to Antiochus Sidetes.

As has become customary with the different volumes of this series, this volume concludes with several elaborate notes and necrologies. These, while of value, scarcely require comment in this place. Enough has been said, indeed, to indicate the worth of the present book and to send the interested reader to the perusal of its contents. He will be well repaid.

A LASTING PEACE

THE STRUCTURE OF A LASTING PEACE: An Inquiry Into the Motives of War and Peace. By Horace M. Kallen, Ph. D. Boston: Marshall, Jones & Co. $1.25.

MR. KALLEN, seeking a precedent for a passionately desired League of Nations, hits upon the situation in America in 1776:

> The Articles of Confederation were primarily a war measure, designed to make the efforts of many sovereign States effective against one common enemy. They provided therefore that the States were to retain all undelegated sovereignty; that they were to constitute an absolute military unity against the enemy assaulting any one of them; that the citizens of one, moving to another, were to receive equal treatment with the citizens of that other; that each should have equal authority with the others, large or small, on the basis of one State, one vote; that no State might enter into special relations with another, or with a foreign power, except by general consent; that no State might order a tariff at cross purposes with the general interest; that Congress alone, representing the general interest, might determine the armament of each State; that no State might go to war except by general consent; that hence treaties, alliances, the making of war and peace were to be the functions of Congress. . . .
> The articles provided, please observe, for all the contingencies that liberal opinion finds it desirable to guard against in the relations between contemporary States.

The resemblance seems striking, but there were very considerable differences which Mr. Kallen himself admits. For instance, the thirteen original British States had no "problems of nationality. By and large, they were of one blood, one language, and one legal and political tradition." A very considerable difference when one thinks of the Balkans and Austria-Hungary! And the inference that Mr. Kallen draws from this: namely, "that this (unity in nationality) did not prevent bitter quarrels and even warfare among them is only another evidence that nationality, even when sovereign, is not the antidote to warfare its contemporary protagonists assert it is," may be true, but that only means that heterogeneous nationalities are even less an antidote. And the problem of a League of Nations is thereby infinitely more difficult. But Mr. Kallen's analogy is highly interesting, and his book contains some original suggestions for the demands of the dictated peace that he so strongly believes in. One suggestion is that the German system of education must be undermined and revolutionized by the sending of one German in every thousand to either America, England, France, or Italy to be educated, and that the money for this should come from a "trust fund, created by confiscating all the property of the royal families in Germany."

CO-OPERATION

CO-OPERATION, THE HOPE OF THE CONSUMER. By Emerson P. Harris, President Montclair Co-operative Society. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.

IF consumers would combine they could defy the allurements of advertising and psychology. Spenders can finance themselves as consumers if not as producers. Thrift is both fashionable and popular in these Liberty Loan days, and here is a book which can be praised on the best sort of thrift. It is not mean to get better goods for less money, nor is the attempt foolish when made under intelligent guidance. Mr. Harris knows how clever salesmen coax dollars from ignorant buyers, and he counsels them how to avoid it by procuring for themselves information about what they buy. His candor induces confidence no less than his experience. He frankly says that Americans are backward in their economies because necessity has not driven them to it. Life has been easier for us than other peoples, and our shopkeepers' competition runs up expenses for them as well as for their customers. They charge too much for the service they render, and they get their custom by offering "free" what really is paid for. Deliveries are not free in the sense that they are not paid for. Deliveries cost 7 cents in Manhattan, and nearly 10 cents in Brooklyn. It costs nearly half the price of ice to deliver it, and quarter of the price to deliver bakery goods. Credit is not "free," but it pays the shopkeeper by inducing liberality in spending by those who do not handle actual funds.

The neighborhood store is the most expensive to manage because of the smallness of its clientage, and the desire to hold custom by meeting unreasonable demands for such accommodation as has been mentioned. The profits made are excessive for the consumer to pay, but not for the storekeeper to expect if he is to remain solvent. The buyer and the seller act on cross-purposes, one seeking profit and the other economy. The remedy is for the consumers to unite as buyers and distributers to themselves. The prudent way is to make a profit in the manner of the shopkeeper, and to declare dividends for the distribution of the profits among themselves of the more rational manner of doing business on facts about goods, and expecting less "free deals" from their own shop than from those which are more expensive. A co-operative store which would certify bulk goods could sell them in competition with package goods. Sound goods could be sold to those who relied upon statements of those without hope of profit to lead them to deceit about qualities.

Careful buyers will find the various tricks of the trade set out for their instruction and avoidance, but without any concealment that economy is troublesome. Some would prefer the trouble, others would prefer the service. The case for making the choice is well stated, and practical assistance is offered those persuaded that there is a better way than the usual one. It is undeniable that co-operative methods have succeeded in several countries, on a great scale in more than one, and a plan suitable for this country is sketched. The manner of presentation is interesting and the book has power of service for those who read it for general information, independent of desires to join buying and selling clubs.

American Social Problems

A volume entitled "American Social Problems" is presented by its authors, Henry Reed Burch and S. Howard Patterson, as an introduction to the study of society; it is intended for use in secondary schools. The authors are teachers in the West Philadelphia High School for Boys. (Macmillan Company. $1.20.)

The Pullman Car

One of the interesting items in the development of our American railroad system is entertainingly treated by Joseph Husband in "The Story of the Pullman Car." The author shows how the Pullman car idea was born and developed, and how it has been made to minister to the comfort of our own and other peoples. (A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.)

with a diploma, or without it? In either case, you of course do not wish to leave off being educated. When education ends, life ends.

Take a Reading Course

Everybody reads, but too many read without any plan, and to no purpose. The college graduate is like other people in the need of system, but a little more likely to realize his need. The Chautauqua Reading Course is useful alike to the person of limited training, who labors many nights over each book, and the critic or vigorous man of affairs who can sweep thru them all in a few hours. For either, a group of related, intelligible, and competent studies leads to a well rounded result.

Don't Read at Random

For many years, the very mention of a reading course has meant without further explanation the Chautauqua Reading Course. It was the first and is still the best and it alone has a world-wide fame. The cost is trifling, $6 for a year. Are you tired wasting your odd minutes? Write for free synopsis or mail this ad, signed, to Box 31

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

ROMAN LAW IN THE MODERN WORLD. By Charles Phineas Sherman, D. C. L. 3 vols. Boston: The Boston Book Company. $13.

WHILE Professor Sherman's work is, of course, intended primarily for lawyers, it still affords a great deal of interest to the layman. In fact, the first volume, which traces the history of the law from pre-Roman times down to our own, is so clearly written and touches the streams of history and philosophy in so many ways, that it is to be hoped the volume may some day be printed by itself for general circulation. Professor Sherman's erudition is wide and deep; his style is eminently readable. To illustrate the general interest of his outline, how he makes it a part of the wide stream of human progress, we may quote a passage from the first volume in which he describes the effect of the Stoic philosophy upon the Roman law. He attributes the transformation of the Roman law into world law to four forces: (1) the influence of the Praetorian edict, (2) Greek philosophy, especially Stoicism, (3) the influence of the jurisconsults, and (4) imperial legislation. Speaking of the second of these influences, Professor Sherman says:

> The Stoic philosophy in particular appealed to the more intelligent Romans of the later Republic. Cicero accepted the tenets of this philosophy. And from Cicero to Alexander Severus the ethical principles of Stoic philosophy played a prominent part in Roman education and culture. The Roman mind took naturally to the dignity, righteous simplicity, and austerity of Stoicism. Stoic philosophy finally ascended the throne in the person of Marcus Aurelius, perhaps its greatest philosophical exponent. Says Sir Henry Maine: "To live according to nature was to resist passion and to rise above the disorderly habits and gross indulgences of the vulgar to higher laws of action which nothing but self-denial and self-command would enable the aspirant to observe. It is notorious that this proposition—live according to nature—was the sum of the tenets of the famous Stoic philosophy. * * *"
> Consequently the Roman jurists gave the name of jus naturale—natural law, law of nature—to describe the natural or ethical foundation on which the civil law must rest. Stoicism declared that the world was possessed by an all-pervading soul, which could be regarded from two different points of view, as a universal force or a universal reason. This soul is revealed both in the external law of nature and the original nature of man. Man participates in the universal reason. Hence the law of nature is the highest rule of human conduct; the great duty of man is to discover and conform to the highest law of reason.

The Roman law became universal because it had for its basis a universal and sane philosophy; the Romans were as great lawmakers as the Greeks were artists because the common sense of the Romans insisted upon living according to a system that could be codified and tabulated. Professor Sherman pleads eloquently for such a codification in our own law:

> As a country we are now repeating the activity of Rome in legislation. The development of our American law into jurisprudence has been, especially during the last century and a half, most usually by a return to the civil law of Rome. And this returning is still in progress. The most striking illustrations—and there are many—are these three: (1) The feudal common law ideal that husband and wife are one, and that one is the husband, has been repudiated in nearly all American States. Married women now have restored to them the power to control their separate property independently of their husbands. And this is simply the re-enactment of the doctrine of Roman law as to the freedom of married women. (2) Every American State has laws of inheritance similar to those of Rome. (3) The most pressing terrible necessity of our times is how to frame out of the gigantic mass of our reported case law an organized body of rules—in other words, how to codify our law. All civilized countries of the world except Great Britain and the United States have followed the example of Rome and codified their law. France, Germany, Spain, Italy, Austria, the Latin American States, and Japan have adopted the Roman Emperor Justinian's solution of this problem.

In the last part of the book Professor Sherman analyzes the commonly cited difficulties in the way of codifying our law and easily refutes them. The objections are: (1) that Anglo-American law is essentially non-codifiable; (2) that a republic cannot codify its law: to do that necessitates a monarchy or an empire; (3) that there is no necessity for a uniform codified Federal system of private law; (4) that such a system is impossible without impairing the integrity of the several States; (5) that such codification would cause atrophy. A close and reasoned examination of these various objections shows them to be unfounded and chimerical.

Volume II. is a manual containing the modern codes of foreign countries. Another specialty of this volume is a constant comparison of our common law with the civil law. The third volume is a guide to any Roman law sources or texts and foreign codes in a law library. It also informs the reader what English translations of Roman and modern codes exist.

A BLUE DEVIL OF FRANCE

DESPITE the fact that he has seen the worst of the war, there is a delightfully genial quality about Captain Capart's narrative. A member of General Pétain's General Staff, he fought in Belgium and at Verdun before he left for America as part of the scientific mission which collaborated with officials of this Government just two months after America became an ally against Prussianism. His vision of the poilu is as intimate as that of Barbusse in "Under Fire." Unlike that author, however, Captain Capart writes with a sympathy and humor that are intriguing. Though his narrative does not shrink from ugliness and cruelty and death, it is yet animated by a fine, if sometimes grim, cheerfulness.

Captain Capart has told his story exactly as he himself saw it without extenuation or mitigating romanticism. As he says in his preface, his first object in writing was to tell the truth. He has made no effort after unity beyond the unity inevitably imparted by a consistency of viewpoint and sympathy. There is no raving against the Hun, no vituperation. The Captain was presumably too busy to vituperate; he realized perhaps that the German is not sensitive and that he is proof against invective. He tells stories about queer coincidences, relates anecdotes (mainly humorous) about poilus, describes the sensation of falling several hundreds of feet in an airplane:

> Today I went up on a rocket test at a very high altitude. Suddenly one of the rockets burst in the propeller, and it snapped like a pistol shot—the horizontal rudder also was damaged.
> The descent commenced by great jerks, and it seemed as if the machine would collapse and fall apart.
> Flemeng, my pilot, made a sign "that it would go very bad with us." We went through a great cloud, and I began to believe we would crash to earth. Despite three accidents in two days, this will be very pretty, I say to myself. I thought that after what I had seen these last three months it would be absolutely idiotic to die in a bed, and I began to laugh at the idea.

One can imagine it is d'Artagnan speaking. After many lugubrious books about the "spirit of the soldier," it is delightful to read one like this, where danger is faced with an adventurous longing to experience a new sensation.

JEWISH HISTORICAL SOCIETY

PUBLICATIONS OF THE AMERICAN JEWISH HISTORICAL SOCIETY, NO. 26. Published by the society. $3.25.

IN April, 1917, the American Jewish Historical Society held its twenty-fifth annual meeting in this city and, at the same time, commemorated the silver jubilee of its founding here on June 7, 1892. The present volume of its "Publications" is practically exclusively devoted to an account of the proceedings at this interesting celebration and to a number of the papers read at the anniversary meeting.

The address of the President, Dr. Cyrus Adler, soberly describes the purposes of those who were responsible for the establishment of the society and reviews in broad outline its work for the first twenty-five years. While we miss all references to details in this summary we must accept the plea that twenty-five years are a brief span as extenuation for such omission. In truth, after twenty-five years, with many of the founders still hale and hearty, it would smack of self-adulation for a long catalogue of achievements to be attempted. Supplementing this address are the remarks of the Hon. Oscar S. Straus, the first President of the society, which he made as a part of the celebration. Here the vital connection between this society and the position of the Jew in American life is rightly insisted on. With Mr. Straus's further assertion that the society has faithfully preserved the ideals laid down for it by those who founded it, none who has carefully examined the series of its published memoirs, and especially the latest addition thereto, will quarrel. The reviewer may, therefore, felicitate the society on passing this auspicious milestone in its career and summarize the qualities which make this volume a useful contribution to knowledge.

Do you believe that it is only by evading the realities of life and by erecting in their stead a lovely, unattainable dream that any human progress is made possible? That is the rather astonishing theory advanced in beyond life

By James Branch Cabell
In this teasing, provocative book Mr. Cabell defends the romantic spirit in life and letters, touching incidentally upon such matters as witch-women, prohibition, The Cinderella Legend as a social force and a multitude of other curious topics. The book includes a discussion of certain aspects of literature from Sophocles to Harold Bell Wright, viewed in the light of "Economist" doctrine.
H. L. Mencken says of Cabell: "An artist of the first consideration. * * * He is an original and will be talked of hereafter."
Those who are interested in writings of very real distinction and merit will find their anticipations more than fulfilled in this book, which shows its author to be a literary artist of singular excellence.

Before the Price Goes Up

Finish these Stories for Yourself

The girl got $6 a week and was lonely. "Piggy"—you can imagine his kind—was waiting downstairs. He knew where champagne and music could be had. But that night she didn't go. That was Lord Kitchener's doing. But another night? O. Henry tells about it in a story. Read it.

Judge!

When you sent me up for four years, you called me a rattlesnake. Maybe I am one—anyhow you hear me rattling now. One year after I got to the pen, my daughter died of—well, they said it was poverty and the disgrace together. You've got a daughter, Judge, and I am going to make you know how it feels to lose one. I'm free now, and I guess I've turned to rattlesnake all right. Look out when I strike. Yours respectfully,
RATTLESNAKE.

If This Happened on Your Wedding Night?

She had gone to change into her traveling dress. A few moments later he found her in her room—the woman he had just made his wife—and his best friend. What would you have done? What did he do? Find out from the story by O. Henry

FOR years you have read these advertisements of O. Henry and thought that some day you would take advantage of their low price.

But that low price is almost over. The rising price of binding alone makes it impossible to continue, to say nothing of the increase in the price of paper, labor—everything that goes into these sets.

We could make poorer books and continue to sell them at this price. But O. Henry is worthy of a good book. His pages will be read and re-read, so the books must be strongly and well made—as well as good to look at.

So the price must go up. No more will you be able to say "Tomorrow I will get these books at the bargain price." This is your chance. The hands of the clock won't turn back. Send the coupon today—now—or you will be too late.

O. HENRY

O. Henry has made another record. More volumes of his works have been sold than any short stories in the history of the world. Up to the day this page goes to press 2,500,000 volumes have been sold—in England and Australia, France and Belgium—throughout the world—over two million in the United States alone. So many editions of O. Henry have been printed that the old plates were entirely worn out and we had to make brand-new plates for this edition, so you will get the very first impression from these new plates—the clearest, cleanest print you have ever seen.

One soldier in France had with him a volume of O. Henry, which was split up into as many parts as there were stories, distributed and used until the print had worn away.

LETTERS OF IRVING AND HENRY BREVOORT

THE LETTERS OF WASHINGTON IRVING TO HENRY BREVOORT. THE LETTERS OF HENRY BREVOORT TO WASHINGTON IRVING. Together with Other Unpublished Brevoort Papers. Edited, with an Introduction, by George S. Hellman. Two volumes. Illustrated. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Each volume, $3.50.

IN 1915 a limited edition was published, in two volumes, of the letters of Washington Irving to Henry Brevoort. This was followed the next year by the publication, in similar form and also in a limited issue, of Brevoort's letters to Irving, together with other interesting Brevoort papers with which the public was as yet unacquainted. The original edition of each was very small indeed—there were only 255 sets of the Irving letters—and the demand for a general publication was quite to be expected. That demand is now met by the issue of the original four volumes in two books, of convenient size, with excellent illustrations, printed in large type on good paper, at a price not prohibitive for the public at large. These important documents in the literary history of America are thus placed in the hands of the reading public generally. As every one knows, Henry Brevoort was the intimate lifelong friend of Washington Irving, and these letters supply valuable material in Irving's biography. They give, as well, an important and interesting picture of American life—especially in New York—during the first half of the nineteenth century.

It is not to be expected that the correspondence of two men will offer a complete biography of either one of them. Irving's letters to Brevoort were most of them written during the years 1815-1831, of the American author's long stay in Europe. While the two friends were both in New York correspondence was not necessary. But of those years Irving's letters paint a satisfying picture, in which the writer himself stands out clearly. As Mr. Hellman, the editor, says:

> With no other friend did Washington Irving carry on so voluminous a correspondence as with Henry Brevoort. It forms a record of friendship such as the annals of our literature nowhere parallels. It is not an exciting document; it contains, indeed, introspective analyses, but not in the morbid and sometimes thrilling manner to which later literary correspondences have accustomed us; and the veil of Irving's reserve is only now and then lifted to disclose the precious intimacies of his chivalrous soul. Often the tribulations of business affairs interpose their shadows; but, for the most part, it is a sane and cheerful record of a famous life.

We have, for example, Irving's response to the fame that came to him as the author of the "Sketch Book." Brevoort had taken charge of the publication of the book in America; and we find Irving writing to him from London, Sept. 9, 1819:

> The receipt of your letter and the reading of some of these criticisms this morning have rendered me nervous for the whole day. I feel almost appalled by such success, and fearful that it cannot be real—or that it is not fully merited, or that I shall not set up to the expectations that may be formed. We are whimsically constituted beings. I had got out of conceit of all that I had written, and considered it very questionable stuff—and now that it is so extravagantly bepraised I begin to feel that I shall not do as well again. However, we shall see as we get on—as yet I am extremely irregular and precarious in my fits of composition. The least thing puts me out of the vein, and even applause flurries me and prevents my writing, though of course it will ultimately be a stimulus. • • •
> I hope you will not attribute all this sensibility to the kind reception I have met with to an author's vanity—I am sure it proceeds from very different sources. Vanity could not bring the tears into my eyes as they have been brought by the kindness of my countrymen. I have felt cast down, blighted, and broken spirited, and these sudden rays of sunshine agitate even more than they revive me.
> I hope—I hope I may yet do something more worthy of the approbation lavished on me.

A year and a half later, in the midst of financial discouragements, Irving wrote in reply to Brevoort's plea that he return to America:

> You urge me to return to New York—and any many ask whether I mean to renounce my country? To this last question I have no reply to make—and yet I will make a reply—as far as my precarious and imperfect abilities enable me, I am endeavoring to serve my country. Whatever I have written has been written with the feelings and published as the writings of an American. Is that renouncing my country? How else am I to serve my country—by coming home and begging an office of it; which I should not have the kind of talent or the business habits requisite to fill? If I can do any good in this world it is with my pen. I feel that even with that I can do very little, but if I do that little and do it as an American, I think my exertions ought to guarantee me from so unkind a question as that which you say is generally made.
> As to coming home—I should at this moment be abandoning my literary plans, such as they are.

Throughout these letters from England and the Continent, however, Irving makes constant reference—sometimes joyous, sometimes wistful, always tender—to his homecoming. He can never, he says, repeatedly, feel at home out of America.

In the letter just quoted his financial difficulties lead him, too, to an expression of most chivalrous loyalty to his brothers, at a time when he was receiving, in his business ventures, scant sympathy from home.

In all his letters Irving's own noble character stands out—brave, modest, kind, never self-centred, never uncharitable—though in one striking instance, at least, stern toward a culpable thoughtlessness. His comments on people and events at home and abroad are significant and fine. Of an American friend whom he has met in England he writes:

> Charles is exactly what an American should be abroad—frank, manly, and unaffected in his habits and manners, liberal and independent in his opinions, generous and unprejudiced in his sentiments toward other nations, but most loyally attached to his own.

Mr. Hellman points out that Washington Irving is "the only instance in American history of a man who, not alone keeping aloof from partisanship, but even experiencing a decided aversion to all political office, was offered high positions in many fields of public life." Of his nonpartisan temper, and Brevoort's as well, the letters bear striking witness. From Washington, in 1811, Irving writes:

> As I do not suffer party feelings to bias my mind, I have associated with both parties—and have found worthy and intelligent men in both—with honest hearts, enlightened minds, generous feelings, and bitter prejudices. A free communication of this kind tends more than anything else to divest a man's mind of party bigotry; to make him regardless of those jaundiced representations of persons and things which he is too apt to have held up to him by party writers, and to beget in him that candid, tolerant, good-natured habit of thinking, which I think every man that values his own comfort and utility should strive to cultivate.

Irving's admiration and affection for Sir Walter Scott are well known; but in Brevoort's letters there is mention of an interesting fact untold in Irving's biographies—that Brevoort gave "Knickerbocker's History" to Scott in return for some very rare books on the early history of New England presented to him by the author of the Waverley Novels; Scott had at one time intended to write on the American Indian, but gave up the idea; when he found how great was the interest of his young American friend Brevoort in that subject, he gave him the books—and Brevoort long hoped to write something on the subject himself.

THE AMATEUR MAN

THE AMATEUR MAN. By W. R. Gaut. Duffield & Co. $1.60 net.

Harold Stanley first appears as a successful young lawyer, with a brother-in-law who stands high in the councils of New York's financiers. As the representative of this person, Harold is admitted to the meeting with which the book opens—a gathering of rich men which takes place in March, 1917. These men plan "to prostitute the entire press of this country, and the ministry, and the universities," in order that they may "rivet their clutch still more tightly on the wealth of this land." One of their principal means of pursuing this nefarious project, and the thing which they determine to work for and uphold, is the enforcement of national prohibition. Our Harold forthwith denounces them at great length, and betakes himself to the City of Sax, in Ohio. There he speedily becomes minister of the newly formed People's Church, and preaches what the author assures us are extraordinary sermons. Many of these are given at full length, and long extracts are printed from some of the others. Harold makes many friends and many enemies. The book contains several villains, the principal one being a person who possessed a beautiful wife and kept her hidden on an island in Lake Ramona, on the borders of which stood the City of Sax. Harold is kidnapped, kept a prisoner in a cave, takes an important part in a murder trial; is "assaulted, blackmailed, libeled, shot, gaslighted, and pressmobbed"; in short, his career is as lively as that of any hero of a movie serial. Presently he is nominated Governor of Ohio by a new political party, and when the book ends his friends and enemies alike are expecting him to be the next President of the United States.

Three Big Novels by Leading Authors

WHO CARES? By COSMO HAMILTON, is a story of adolescence, of a boy and girl flung suddenly upon their own resources, opening the secrets of life without guidance, and coming out of a great adventure undamaged, owing to their inherent sense of cleanness. $1.50 net

THE CURIOUS QUEST By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM, is the story of the amazing adventures of Mr. Ernest Bliss, a rich young London idler, who wagers his physician £25,000 that he can start out with a five-pound note and live for a year on what he can earn. $1.50 net

The APARTMENT NEXT DOOR By WILLIAM JOHNSTON, is the story of the U. S. Secret Service, into which the author has woven mysteries more enthralling than "The House of Whispers." The story introduces some of the ingenious methods of the German plotters and describes the clever ways in which they were thwarted. $1.50 net.

War Verse

EDITED BY FRANK FOXCROFT

Editor of "The Living Age"

"We are accustomed to think of poetry as the expression of soft-handed, pleasure-loving, even if impoverished, men and women, and have believed that whatever else might be lacking in wooing the muse, quietude was an indispensable essential.

"But here is verse written to the accompaniment of the deafening roar of exploding shells and the anguished cries of the wounded and dying; and through it all runs that note of a wonderful awe—that peculiar conviction of the presence of a Great Miracle—the awakening of the god in man.

"One feels that to have missed this book would have been an almost irreparable loss, and to have read it is to have acquired an almost unforgettable heartache, and yet over and above all other emotions is the one of exaltation, the positive assurance that the Great War means the triumph of Good over Evil, the end of the old regime of Autocracy and the beginning of the reign of World Democracy."

David and Jonathan

By

E. Temple Thurston

YOU naturally expect a "different" sort of novel from E. Temple Thurston, something quite apart from the ordinary run of fiction. Nor does he disappoint you in "David and Jonathan." Out of a most dramatic situation he weaves a story as whimsical as his "City of Beautiful Nonsense," but thrilling, making possible the most fantastic improbabilities. $1.50 net. GEORGES CLEMEMCEAU, Premier of France, in

France Facing Germany

Speaks for France

The future of the world is dependent on the coming Peace, which in turn rests largely with three men, of whom M. Clemenceau is one. In this volume he has presented to the world the viewpoint which France will doubtless adopt at the peace table. He analyses the origins and progress of the struggle between France and Germany and the interests, hopes and fears of France. A knowledge of what M. Clemenceau stands for as the leader of France is vital to any understanding of the peace terms.

SOME NOVELS BY WOMEN AND ART BY PLEBISCITE

THE WOMEN WHO MAKE OUR NOVELS. By Grant M. Overton. New York: Moffat, Yard & Co. $1.50.

TO at least one reviewer the title recalls from some subconscious warehouse of unassorted recollections a scene in a Broadway melodrama of four or five years back—an apartment house lobby, with a gum-chewing telephone girl, who neglected the bell and the importunities of callers in her absorption in a novel—a novel bound in a bright pink paper jacket and called "The Prince and the Poppycock," or something of the sort. But it appears that Mr. Overton is not writing about the women who, as the bulk of the reading public, create the demand for the sort of novel that authors supply; but the women who actually write the novels which other women—and men—read. So the subconscious connection was perhaps an accident; but as Mr. Overton tells us on Page 1 that "to say a thing is accidental is to say that it is ordered or ordained, decreed, immutably fixed upon from the beginning," there may have been some reason in it after all; for most of the book is taken up with bright pink novels, regarded in a bright pink way.

Now, Mr. Overton may have intended to be critically and palely blue in his treatment. He calls himself a literary reporter, which he says is "a sort of new and strange creature"; and in this capacity he tells us that he is trying to give us an account of the "personalities, performances, and methods of work"—and the philosophies—of thirty-two American women who write or have written novels. But this is only a part of it. If it were only reporting, it would wring anguished howls from a night city editor; but besides the reporting there is literary criticism, which is rather formidable. And it is formidable exactly because it is written by a man who, however he may disown the title, is by profession a literary critic. First he wrote his book; then he went over it, hunting for any faults that he as a critic could find in it; and then he wrote an introduction in which he disposes of the critic's objections by the process technically known as "confession and avoidance," and presents the resultant edifice triumphantly, a work triply fortified against the assaults of the otherwise minded. And of course this is a challenge to the critic, who cannot admit that the craft of an author may make a book wholly immune against criticism.

Now, the merits of the book are two—firstly, that it does, as its author claims, fill a long-felt want. It gives the substantial details of the life and work of these thirty-two writers, much of which is not to be found anywhere else, and all of which in one book makes an extremely valuable compilation of biographical material. Secondly, it is highly provocative; for from his reinforced intrenchment the author sallies forth to wipe the earth with those who disagree with him. He does not forget that he has promised facts, not opinions; but he is a follower of William of Ockham, and holds that all his opinions are facts. He knows what he likes, including G. K. Chesterton, virtue, and best sellers; and what he hates, including art and people who talk about it. And he falls upon those who are "sophisticated, cynical, world worn, and merely flippant," and smites them hip and thigh, conspues them, tramples them underfoot, casts them forth utterly.

So the book contains a substratum of literary reporting—there is plenty of this in each biography, and it is of value whatever you think of the rest; literary criticism, of which the general text seems to be that whatsoever things are pure and of good report, we should think on these things, whether they exist or not; and, finally, a vast deal of metaphysics centring around the cult of the Fact.

Of course, the selection of thirty-two out of the thousands of women novelists is not an easy task. Probably some of the names in this book will be unknown to many readers, and everybody will have two or three whom he would have included. But you have to stop somewhere, and you have to allow for tastes. Speaking reportorially, Mr. Overton makes a good case for including both writers whose work is artistically fine and writers who have won wide popularity; he presently leaves us with no doubt as to where his sympathies lie, and by the end of the book he has those of us who prefer a thing well done to a thing badly done reduced to such abject submission that we are thankful to have any artists included at all. In any event, it is a good thing to have a book which includes Edith Wharton and Gene Stratton Porter (the antithesis is the author's) in the same goodly fellowship; and since nearly every author has been allowed, encouraged, or incited to tell about herself from her own point of view (though sometimes as a mere preface to herself from Mr. Overton's point of view) there is here much useful evidence as to what our lady authors are and what they think they are.

But how Mr. Overton hates those whom Mayor Hylan calls "art artists"! And how he likes everybody else! His principal admiration, it would appear, is reserved for the two Porters—Gene Stratton and Eleanor H.—but one suspects that perhaps these two chapters are a mere exercise in eristic. If so, they are beautifully done; you end them with the conviction that the author regards "St. Elmo" as the great American novel. But his enthusiasm for each authoress leads him to cumulative compliment as he approaches the end of the chapter, so that you lay the book down with the somewhat hazy impression that at sometime or another each and every one of the chosen thirty-two has been acclaimed our greatest woman novelist—except poor Mrs. Wharton. For her there is no mercy; she is an artist.

The achievements of Amelia E. Barr are "much bigger and solid and more worth while than many, many efforts at literary 'art.'" Or again, we read of stories "artistically, that is unintelligibly, written." Art is not life, says our author, and never can be, a discovery which, of course, is not new; but as he uses the word "art" means the work of Bertha M. Clay—to take an example from outside his book—just as much as the work of Edith Wharton. That is to say, there is good art and bad art; Mr. Overton or anybody else has a right to prefer bad art if he wants to, but he should not base the preference on the assertion that his bad art is not art at all, but life. One doubts if even he could read a book which transcribed life exactly.

But the Thrasymachean fury of his assault very nearly silences objection. "If a thing is stated as good, bad, or indifferent the statement is made as a statement of fact and not of personal opinion." "The reader must not construe what we say about her work as an expression of opinion, but as a statement of fact." "They are invincible, unassailable, these arguments, for they are facts." Kathleen Norris's merits may be ascribed in part to her newspaper training, which inculcates a respect for fact. Now Mr. Overton has been a reporter, and he must have observed that whatever his own reaction to the phenomena about him, a reporter's training induces in many other men the conviction that there are no facts, although for purposes of convenience it is often necessary to assume them. But those who take this view are vain and empty persons, no more to be regarded than those who do not admire "K" and "The White-Linen Nurse" and "Bambi"; or those who hold that "realism" may occasionally, and regrettably, be not wholly pleasant.

But this is a convenient doctrine; sheltered by it Mr. Overton doctorfrankcranes at length. "There is only one opinion about Mrs. Wharton's work," (three books excepted,) and that is, of course, an unfavorable one. It is art; need one say more? "If some people find no pleasure or benefit in Gene Stratton Porter, that is exclusively their own fault • • • Is it good to have come to such a state?" "There are no literary values, there are only values in life." These are facts.

But the book is much more than a blend of reporting and dogma. One is amazed at its omniscience; for example, within the first four pages we have disposed of culture, Goethe, and the divine right of kings, besides getting a good deal off our mind about Edith Wharton. The author says he is 31 years old, and certainly it is an amazing and highly creditable achievement to hold even wrong opinions on as many subjects as he touches here. Most men of his age have never even got around to more than half the matters on which his conclusions are irrevocably and eternally established. So, after this bombardment of assertion, it is a grievous shock to come upon enthusiastic praise of those who "don't know much about literature, but know what they like." Sophisticated people, says our author, do not know what they like, &c.

This observation makes one suspect that there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in the Overtonian philosophy; and that among these wanderers without the pale are epistemology and logic. For if you accord weight to the views of those who don't know anything about literature, but know what they like, what is to become of this infinite and necessitarian universe of fact? The only test of ultimate validity, then, is in a majority of votes; and suppose that vote goes against the author? If Mr. Overton reconciles the worship of fact with his confidence in a literary plebiscite, he does it only by soaring to a monistic empyrean where none may follow him. Aha! We have him! But hold—

There it is in black and white on Page 15: "This will not appeal to persons who have not been taught by Gilbert K. Chesterton the act of lucid thinking." True, it will not, but with this all the metaphysical dilemma disappears, for a follower of Chesterton is never under the necessity of reconciling anything with anything. And so "The Women Who Make Our Novels" is revealed at last as the impregnable fortress, the uncriticisable book.

A PEACE CONGRESS OF INTRIGUE

An Intimate Account of the Congress of Vienna, 1815, Based on the Memoirs of Participants There. Translated, and with an Introduction and Copious Explanatory Notes, by Harry Hansen.

Here is the fascinating story, told from many angles, of that brilliant, magnificent, sinister congress of social and political intrigue where small nations were but pawns in a gigantic game of incredible and shameless selfishness. Here pass Talleyrand, Metternich, Czar Alexander II., the charming Countess Zichy, Gentz, Dalbert and many another crafty statesman whose influence and whose methods may soon be seen at work again at Paris and Versailles. The world will know presently.

SALESMEN—AMBITIOUS SALESMEN ABSORB THIS.
A year ago I resigned as sales manager of the largest automobile distributer in the country; mine was a responsible and lucrative position, but I wanted to increase my earning capacity; I had reached the top of the ladder; looked over the business field with a fine comb and rejected innumerable propositions; at last I hit on the greatest business in the world, LIFE INSURANCE, which had been presented to me many times before, but never until I tried the business did I realize the following: A delightful business, calling on the highest type of business and professional men, offering them a commodity of the most unquestionable character; every day doing some good for my fellow-men and at the same time building and enjoying an income far beyond my fondest hopes. Your compensation, based upon commission, will be limited only by your own intelligent application. You ambitious salesmen, come in and let's have a talk and let me thoroughly prove my statements to you. If you are in the 30s or 40s, have demonstrated your ability in your present position; if you are making $35 or upward, and you are eager to double, yes, treble your present income, will you hold yourself open and permit me to prove that I have the very opportunity you have been waiting for? Call and see my sales manager, Mr. Taylor, between 1 and 2 and 4:30 and 5:30 o'clock, 902, 516 5th Av.

BANK ENLARGES IN HARLEM.

Corn Exchange Branch Improvements at Lenox Avenue Corner.

A building operation has been started close to the busy corner at Lenox Avenue and 125th Street which, although small, indicates the increasing business and financial activity in the Harlem commercial section. The Corn Exchange Bank, which has maintained its Harlem branch for many years at the northwest corner of Lenox Avenue and 125th Street, purchased the old four-story residence at 311 Lenox Avenue last year. It adjoins the Beverley apartment house on the corner, one of the oldest structures of its kind in Harlem, and which has always been well rented. The bank has leased the northerly half of the ground floor of the apartment formerly used as a doctor's office, to enlarge its offices which, when alterations are finished, will occupy all of the ground floor of the apartment building, fronting 99.11 feet on the avenue. To provide for additional room for the expansion of its business the adjoining house was bought, and a low building will be erected on the site, the ground floor of which will be connected with the bank offices in the apartment structure. The 311 Lenox Avenue plot has a frontage of 19.11 feet. The house has just been torn down. When the operation is completed the Corn Exchange Harlem Branch will have office frontage on Lenox Avenue of 119.10 feet, at the downtown station entrance to the Lenox Avenue and Seventh Avenue subway.

New Companies Take Title.

The nine-story home of the Searun Club, sold in foreclosure recently for $153,500, is to be taken over by the 420 West 116th Street Corporation, formed at Albany, with J. A. Martin, C. P. Schrotter, and P. J. Dobson as Directors. The new corporation is capitalized at $10,000.

The Sheldon, Inc., capitalized at $100,000, has been incorporated at Albany to take title to the ten-story apartment hotel at 778 and 780 Madison Avenue, near Sixty-sixth Street, which property was sold recently by the North Madison Avenue Company to Philadelphia interests. The hotel is to be named the Sheldon. A. J. Peck, J. M. Fagan, and E. Beechel are Directors in the corporation.

Ash Removal.

The Real Estate Board of New York, the Merchants Association, and other prominent civic bodies will come together in the near future to find ways and means to settle the vexatious problem of ash removal from apartment houses, hotels, and office buildings.

RAILROAD DEFICIT POINTS TO NEW RISE IN FREIGHT RATES

Revenue Under Government Operation May Be $250,000,000 Short This Year.

M'ADOO ESTIMATE TOO LOW

Prospect That Wage Increases Will Total Not Less Than $900,000,000.

EARNINGS STEADILY DROP

With the "Revolving Fund" Nearly Gone, Hines Weighs Five Plans to Meet Situation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The cost of Federal operation of the railroads, mainly as a result of higher wages, has reached the point, it was learned tonight, where it may be necessary for the new Director General of Railroads, Walker D. Hines, to seek a further rise in freight rates to meet the great increase.

Serious consideration is now being given to the question of a further advance as a result of facts developed at conferences held last week between Mr. Hines and his staff of Regional Directors. Preliminary estimates before the Director General indicate that the deficit for 1919 may not be less than $250,000,000, and if there is such a deficit it will be even larger than that which resulted from Federal operation of the railroads in 1918.

Wage increases have run into millions of dollars above former Director General McAdoo's original estimates, and there is every indication that the total of these increases will be not less than $900,000,000. If the four railway brotherhoods obtain another revision of wages, which will in their rates of pay the aggregate cost of wage increases will be around $1,000,000,000 by the end of 1919.

$250,000,000 Deficit Feared.

The operation of the railroads by the Government is declared to have reached the point, with operating expenses mounting so rapidly on the revenue increases developed by advances in freight and passenger rates in 1918, that those in charge of Federal operation of the railroads have abandoned hope of earning any surplus in 1919.

The 1918 advance of 25 per cent. in freight rates went into effect at the end of June, after which railway net operating revenue fell off from month to month as follows: July, $137,000,000; August, $127,000,000; September, $90,000,000, October, $87,000,000; November, $57,000,000. Figures for December, when completed, are expected to show the net operating revenue even lower. The last two months show the full effect of the wage increases that have been made as well as the rate increases, the recent wage advances having been effective in September and October.

The statement was made tonight that the original "revolving fund" of $500,000,000 would be exhausted in a few days and that a new fund would be necessary to enable the Government to finance the operation of the railroads and assist in capital expenditures. On Jan. 3 Mr. McAdoo estimated that the deficit in operation would be $130,000,000 for 1919. This figure was later revised to $250,000,000, and now it is asserted that it will be about $250,000,000.

It was asserted tonight that in the last six months the public, under higher freight and passenger fares, had paid $2,500,000,000 for transportation. This rate, maintained for another six months, would make the cost of transportation something like $5,500,000,000, as compared with $4,000,000,000 paid in 1917 under private ownership and operation. While the volume of traffic hauled was almost equal to what it is now. Unless these figures are proved to be wrong it would appear that the cost of Government operation of the roads to the public will be $1,500,000,000 higher than under private operation.

Cost of Wage Increases.

The big item in increased cost of Federal control has been increased wages. When Mr. McAdoo last Summer raised the freight and passenger rates it was estimated that $500,000,000 would fully cover all wage advances then regarded as necessary to enable the employes to meet the higher cost of living. Just before retiring from the Director Generalship, Mr. McAdoo, when before the Senate Committee two weeks ago, estimated that the wage advances granted by the Government amounted to $650,000,000. In the last week more complete returns are understood to have been laid before Director General Hines in his conferences with the Regional Directors, indicating that the cost of increased wages would be $900,000,000.

The possibility of this increase in the payroll reaching a billion dollars a year was intimated tonight. It is expected as a result of the report which the Wage Board will soon make after hearing and considering the demands that have been made by the trainmen's brotherhoods. The four brotherhoods received an advance of $60,000,000 under the Adamson eight-hour law, and for that reason got very little increase from the general wage increase which the Director General made last year. However, since the making of the large advances by the Director General to the other railway

Foil Royalist Plot of Austrian Cadets

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Jan. 18.—The Wiener Journal reports that a monarchist conspiracy has been discovered among the cadets of the military academy at Breitensee, near Vienna.

By order of the Soldiers' Council a battalion of the Civil Guard surrounded the military school and seized 400 rifles, machine guns, and flame throwers, and 30,000 rounds of ammunition.

RADIO TO STARS, MARCONI'S HOPE

Inventor Says Waves of Ether Are Eternal and Can Reach Other Planets.

GETS STRANGE SIGNALS NOW

These, He Declares, Might Conceivably Have Proceeded from Other Worlds.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 20.—The Daily Chronicle publishes an interview which Harold Begbie had with William Marconi, in the course of which the latter discussed the possibility of communicating by wireless with the stars.

Mr. Begbie asked him if he thought that waves of ether were eternal. Mr. Marconi replied:

"Yes, I do. Messages that I sent off ten years ago have not yet reached some of the nearest stars. When they arrive there why should they stop? It is like an attempt to express one-third as a decimal fraction; you can go on forever without coming to any sign of an end. That is what makes me hope for a very big thing in the future."

"What is that?" asked Mr. Begbie.

"Communication with intelligences on other stars," answered Mr. Marconi. "It may some day be possible, and as many of the planets are much older than ours the beings who live there ought to have information for us of enormous value.

"It is silly to say that other planets are uninhabited because they have no atmosphere or are so hot or are so different from the earth. If there were no fish in the sea we should say life there is impossible, and so it is impossible for man."

The interviewer agreed, but objected that the language difficulty seemed to present an obstacle impossible to surmount.

"Well, it is an obstacle," Mr. Marconi replied, "but I don't think it is insurmountable. You see, one might get through some such message as 2 plus 2 equals 4, and go on repeating it until an answer came back signifying "Yes," which would be one word. Mathematics must be the same throughout the physical universe. By sticking to mathematics over a number of years one might come to speech. It is certainly possible."

The writer adds that Mr. Marconi stopped speaking for a moment, and then, as if the matter was something so uncertain that he did not feel it worthy of more than passing mention, said he had often received strong signals out of the ether which seemed to come from some place outside the earth and which might conceivably have proceeded from the stars.

FRENCH AVIATOR FIRST TO LAND UPON A ROOF

PARIS, Jan. 19.—Jules Vedrines won a prize of 25,000 francs today for being the first airman to land upon the roof of a house on a flight.

Vedrines left Issy les Moulineaux at 1:20 o'clock this afternoon, notwithstanding a thick fog, with the purpose of attempting a landing on the roof of the Galleries Lafayette, a large department store near the St. Lazare Station. The roof, which is wide and long, and without obstructions on it, has previously been proposed for use as an aerial station in Paris.

Vedrines flew over the boulevards and slowed down as he passed over a bank building, opposite his destination. Here the aviator shut off the power of his engines and skimmed the parapet surrounding the roof by only a few inches. The landing was a spectacular one, and, although the machine was slightly damaged, Vedrines was uninjured. When the machine came to a standstill Vedrines waved his arms to a spectator on the bank roof, yelling, "There you are."

The roof is fifty-two feet wide and about seventy-five feet long. The width of the airplane used by Vedrines is thirty-six feet.

After the flight and the successful landing Vedrines said he never had the slightest doubt about its success. He added that he intended to fly around the world.

SERIOUS RIOTING REPORTED TO MARK GERMAN ELECTIONS

General Strike Said to Have Been Declared at Leipsic by Reds.

BERLIN STRONGLY GUARDED

New Election Planned in Event of Any Polling Places Being Forced to Close.

REDS ACTIVE IN PROVINCES

But Bourgeois Leaders Generally Are Confident of Obtaining a Safe Majority.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—Grave election riots are taking place today in Germany, where the people are voting to choose members of the National Assembly, according to Copenhagen advices to the Exchange Telegraph Company, which say a general strike has been declared at Leipsic, which is without gas and water.

The deaths of Dr. Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg appear to have made a deep impression in provincial towns and led to demonstrations and street fighting, it is reported.

At Leipsic a mob is said to have destroyed the election bureau of the Democratic party, and to have confiscated the evening editions of the Leipsic Tageblatt, Zeitung and General Gazette, compelling those papers to publish a declaration deploring the "murders in Berlin" and blaming the Government for them. Strikes and demonstrations are reported in Duesseldorf and other towns.

Airmen were flying over Berlin today and bombarding the city with pamphlets issued by all the political parties, it is reported.

An Associated Press dispatch from Berlin dated yesterday says:

Majority Socialists' Advantage.

"The election campaign has been worked out in an energetic manner, measured by German standards. The majority Socialists have a certain advantage in their monopoly of all public buildings, railway stations, and the like for election posters. They are even having their election literature printed in the Government printing office and distributed by Government officials, soldiers in automobiles, and even by airplanes.

"The Independents' ticket in Berlin is headed by Herr Eichhorn, former Chief of Police, who recently fled the city and for whom the police still are vainly searching.

"The bourgeois leaders generally are confident that they will obtain a safe majority. The votes of the women are expected especially to strengthen the Christian People's Party, as the Clerical Party is now known.

"Although a state of siege has not been formally declared, a situation amounting virtually to a state of siege exists in Berlin. The Government has taken all military measures needful to protect the voters and safeguard the elections.

"If any of the 800 polling places in Berlin are compelled to close as a result of interference it is planned to repeat the election eight days hence under reinforced military protection. As the system of proportional election has been adopted, the counting of the ballots will occupy nearly a week.

"Alsace-Lorraine will not participate, but elections in German territory in Posen now occupied by Poles will be held, if necessary under the protection of troops.

"The Spartacans continue to show their heads outside the capital. The radicals have seized all the bourgeois papers in Düsseldorf and wrecked the central bureaus of the Clerical and Democratic Parties and burned their campaign literature. The Soldiers' and Workmen's Council of Düsseldorf ordered the closing of the schools and theatres today as a symbol of mourning for Dr. Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg. It also has announced that it will support a general strike.

"Disturbances have occurred at Breslau and at Blankenburg, in the Hartz Mountains, and also at Allenstein, in East Prussia, where campaign meetings resulted in scenes of rioting.

"Gustav Noske, head of the Government police, calling attention to a previous order forbidding street gatherings, has issued a new order reminding the troops of their duty in the protection of citizens.

"No soldier can be excused of failure to perform his duty if he has not in the cases herein specified made timely and adequate use of his weapons to attain the purposes set forth," says a paragraph of the new order.

"It will be recalled that an order

Italians Want Church Bells Made from Austrian Cannon

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Jan. 19.—The Pontiff has sent his Apostolic blessing, with words of encouragement and praise, to members of the Society for the Reconstruction of churches in the devastated districts of Italy. High prelates and noble ladies have undertaken to collect money for priestly vestments, altar pieces, &c., with a view to re-establishing as soon as possible the Catholic cult in those provinces.

Many persons suggest that the military authorities should give a number of Austrian cannon captured by the Italians to make church bells, the old ones having been taken away by the enemy.

TRY TO SOW DISCORD IN ALLIED ARMIES

Insidious Propaganda Used by Germans to Divide French and Americans.

DIRECTED FROM BERLIN

Rentzau and Ahrens Busy There Making Mischief in the Occupied Area.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Jan. 18.—German propaganda, skillfully and subtly conducted, is trying to fan toward flame little sparks of differences between the French and American soldiers in occupied Germany.

One may well ask if it can be true that during the kaleidescopic changes in the German Government the old propaganda machine has kept going in the same old way. One may well ask if it can be true that the German propagandists are working every day among the allied soldiers in occupied Germany. The answer is that both these things are true.

The German plan today is to drive a wedge between the French and Americans. There is not the slightest doubt that there is a well-organized campaign for this end.

The aim is not only to affect the decisions of the Peace Conference, but also as a bigger aim to drive a permanent wedge between the two nations.

If one seeks the reason for this he may turn to Marshal Foch's question asked of the American war correspondents this week as to who could say that in a few years Germany would not try to crush France again. The Marshal remarked that America was far away.

Fussing at Each Other.

Except by the influence of this continued German propaganda it would be very difficult to explain just why soldiers who for six months fought side by side are now fussing at one another.

Neither poilu nor doughboy seems able to tell just why he gets so easily annoyed at the other. The poilu seems unable to tell just why often he does not resist the temptation to ask an American, now that the war is over, why he does not go home. And the doughboy does not take the trouble to analyze the reason why he now sometimes speaks harshly of the poilu whom he admired so much in fighting days.

These differences would grow mostly between doughboys and poilus who understood each other's conversation, and this is not true of the majority of either army. And these little things do not explain why Americans and Frenchmen should be in such a frame of mind toward one another.

The Germans are trying to put more than three thousand miles of ocean between France and America. They are trying to make the American soldiers anti-French propagandists when they get home, so that if war ever started again between France and Germany, America would not jump to the aid of her present ally.

To those in America who would call this a far-fetched dream, it may be set forth that examination of the letters home of American soldiers has caused very serious concern.

During the war Dr. Rentzau of Berlin was stationed in Copenhagen, and from there conducted a propaganda campaign. Dr. Rentzau today has an office in Wilhelmstrasse. Propaganda work is still his task.

There are many in America who will remember a suave gentleman named Dr. Ahrens. The former Chief of the Secret Service, Flynn, remembers him. He was Bernstorff's right-hand man in a lot of propaganda work. I last saw him in New London, where he received from Captain Koenig some secret documents which

PEACE LEAGUE PLAN ASSUMING FORM; SUPREME COUNCIL TO TAKE UP RUSSIA; SHOW EX-KAISER ORDERED ATROCITIES

CONFERENCE RULES ARE OUT

RUSSIA'S STATUS IN DOUBT

Left for Later Determination—Neutrals and Oppressed Nations to be Heard.

PRECEDENCE AT THE TABLE

Determined by Alphabetical Order in French, Which Puts America First.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—Following are the Peace Conference regulations, which were made public officially today:

Section I.

The conference assembled to fix the conditions of peace, first in the preliminaries of peace and then in the definite treaty of peace, shall include the representatives of the belligerent allies and associated powers.

The belligerent powers with general interests—the United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan—shall take part in all meetings and commissions.

The belligerent powers with particular interests—Belgium, Brazil, the British Dominions, and India, China, Cuba, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hedjaz, Honduras, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Serbia, Siam, and the Czechoslovak Republic—shall take part in the sittings at which questions concerning them are discussed.

The powers in a state of diplomatic rupture with the enemy powers—Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru, and Uruguay—shall take part in the sittings at which questions concerning them are discussed.

The neutral powers and States in process of formation may be heard either orally or in writing when summoned by the powers with general interests at sittings devoted especially to the examination of questions directly concerning them, but only so far as these questions are concerned.

Section II.

The powers shall be represented by Plenipotentiary Delegates to the number of: Five for the United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan; three for Belgium, Brazil, and Serbia; two for China, Greece, the King of Hedjaz, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Siam, and the Czechoslovak Republic; one for Cuba, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Liberia, Nicaragua, and Panama; one for Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru, and Uruguay.

The British Dominions and India shall be represented as follows: Two delegates each for Australia, Canada, South Africa and India, including the native States, one delegate for New Zealand.

Although the number of delegates must not exceed the figures above mentioned each delegation has the right to avail itself of the panel system. The representation of the Dominions, including Newfoundland, and of India, may be included in the representation of the British Empire by the panel system.

Montenegro shall be represented by one delegate, but the rules concerning the designation of this delegate shall not be fixed until the moment when the political situation of this country shall have been cleared up.

The conditons of the representation of Russia shall be fixed by the conference at the moment when the matters concerning Russia are examined.

Section III.

Each delegation of plenipotentiaries may be accompanied by technical delegates properly accredited and by two stenographers.

The technical delegates may be present at the sittings for the purpose of furnishing information which may be asked of them. They shall be allowed to speak for the purpose of giving any desired explanations.

Section IV.

The delegates take precedence according to the alphabetical order, in French, of the powers.

Section V.

The conference will be declared open by the President of the French Republic. The President of the Council of French Ministers will be invested temporarily with the Chairmanship immediately after this.

M. Clemenceau has since been elected permanent Chairman of the Conference. A committee composed of one plenipotentiary of each of the great allied and associated powers shall proceed at once to the authentication of the credentials of all the members present.

Section VI.

In the course of the first meeting the Conference will proceed to appoint a permanent President and four Vice Presidents chosen from the plenipoten-

Peace League Plans Reject "Super-Sovereignty"; Avoids the Disarmament Issue Now

PARIS, Jan. 19, (Associated Press.)—The plans for a League of Nations have been reduced to very definite form. The general indications are that the statesmen of the principal nations are steadily drawing together on a structure which will have the support of all, the informal discussions having brought the community of ideas to a point where it may reasonably be expected to appear soon on paper.

It is understood that the general plan which is now most approved in substance by all the parties concerned rejects the theory of the super-sovereignty of an international police force. It also contemplates the working out, as the development of the league progresses, of the most delicate question of all—disarmament—which particularly affects the British Navy. The same principle, it is proposed, shall apply to the other nations associated in the war against Germany.

This idea is founded on the argument that no nation would dispose of instruments by which it expects to defend itself until it has been demonstrated that the forces proposed as a substitute will be efficient.

In the opinion of international lawyers such decisions will remove from actual settlement by the Peace Conference, at this sitting at least, many questions on which complete agreement might not be expected now, but upon which full accord seems probable as the development of the plans for a League of Nations advances.

Such a plan will delegate to various commissions and committees detailed problems which shall be reported with recommendations to the league itself. The probability of such a plan being adopted justifies previous forecasts that the principal accomplishments of the Peace Conference, as it now sits in Paris, will be agreement on broad general principles, leaving the details to be applied in accord therewith, and the making of a preliminary peace which will return the world at the earliest moment possible to its normal status.

POLISH CABINET TO SUMMON DIET

Paderewski Completes Coalition Government and Will Call Parliament for Feb. 9.

ARMY INCREASE ORDERED

Whole United Nation Settling Down—Premier Would Erect Monument to Col. House.

WARSAW, Jan. 19, (Associated Press.)—The full Coalition Ministry formed by M. Paderewski is composed as follows:

Premier and Foreign Minister—M. PADEREWSKI.
Minister of the Interior—M. WOJCIECHOWSKI.
Minister of Commerce—M. HONCIA.
Minister of Finance—M. ENGLICH.
Minister of Public Health—M. JANISSEEWSKI.
Minister of Communications—M. EBERHARDT.
Minister of Posts and Telegraphs—M. LINDQ.
Minister of Agriculture—M. JANICKI
Minister of Arts—M. PRZESMYCKI.
Minister of Labor—M. IVONOVSKI.
Minister of Food—M. MINKIEWICZ
Minister of Justice—M. SUINSKI.
Minister of Public Works—M. PRUCHNIK.

The three last named were members of the Government of Premier Moraczewski. The new Government has decided to summon the constituent Diet Feb. 9. The Government's first decree has been to order the obligatory recruitment of men of the class of 1898.

United Poland appears today a new country, with every mind turned to the future and trying to forget the past. It is as if the people had come out of a nightmare. Now their faces are smiling and the business men are beginning to make plans for the boom they are sure is ahead. They realize that Poland has had the priceless boon of liberty handed to her by the allied victory, and that they will soon be able to enjoy the benefits of it, despite the many difficulties yet to be faced this Winter.

One of the most significant facts is that the prices of commodities in the markets and stores are beginning to drop, just as they did in Prague last November with the inauguration of the Czechoslovak Government. Subscriptions to the new loan amounted to 7,000,000 marks the first day of the canvass and are mounting hourly.

Even those parties which have not been entirely cemented by the efforts of M. Paderewski, Premier and Foreign Minister in the new Coalition Cabinet, who has appealed to his countrymen to be Poles first and party men afterward, are now forgetting their old differences. As an instance, the conservative parties of the three Polands met today and agreed to pull together in the future. The Socialist parties, which united their differences in order to fight M. Paderewski, are now divided, with some sections declaring for the Paderewski Government.

Regarding Colonel Edward M. House, whom he knows well, M. Paderewski said at a public meeting:

"A monument should be built in every Polish town and village to Colonel House."

M. Paderewski is sending notice today of the formation of the new Ministry to the Allies and to the State Department at Washington.

In view of the unsettled political conditions here the public in general give especial credit to M. Paderewski for his personal victory in overcoming old feuds. It is worthy of record that the fact that he is an artist passed unnoted, it occurring to no one to oppose him on that ground with the argument that he therefore was unfitted for a statesman's job. He is known in Poland more as a patriot than as a man who became wealthy abroad through his individual efforts. He and his wife are much beloved for their kindly characters and their charities since their arrival here.

Both M. Paderewski and his wife have worked night and day, traveling, seeing callers and delegations and attending public functions. It was a common sight for the correspondent to see him in the early hours of the morning before he had gone to bed. Then, after sleeping a few hours, he was up again, seeing politicians and begging them for the love of Poland to help him.

His greatest task was to handle General Joseph Pilsudski, the military head of the country, who wished to permit M. Paderewski to form a new Ministry, but was afraid of precipitating a civil war because of the threats of the Socialists.

Jurists Report to Clemenceau He Must Be Punished for Ordering Terrorism.

QUOTE LETTER HE WROTE

"Throats of Men, Women, Children, and Aged Must Be Cut," to Hasten Victory.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—Some points in the report to which Premier Clemenceau referred yesterday when he said he had consulted two eminent jurists on the penal responsibility of the former German Emperor were made public today. The report was drawn up by Ferdinand Larnaude, Dean of the Paris Law Faculty, and Dr. A. G. de Lapradelle, Professor of Rights of Nations in the same Faculty.

The object of the inquiry was to investigate from a purely juridical point of view if the crimes committed by the German Government and army involved the penal responsibility of the former German Emperor, what tribunal should judge him and whether his extradition could be demanded.

Technically an Accomplice.

The authors of the report give a long argument against the bringing of the Ex-Emperor before a tribunal of common law, because his will commanded, but his hand did not execute. They say that he was not the principal offender, and that therefore he could only be punished as an accomplice.

An international tribunal consequently must be found. They consider The Hague arbitration court, founded at the 1899 conference, incompetent to try the Emperor, as the court was meant for cases where no penalty was to be applied. They argue that an entirely new jurisdiction must be created, which should be the first instrument of a League of Nations and in which should appear exclusively the States which fought Germany.

The authors of the report begin by establishing that no penalty is possible against a nation, any more than against a company, but that the manager or director of a company can be punished.

"The Emperor, in the first place," says the report, "as King of Prussia, is President of the confederation, by virtue of a special law in which human will does not enter. The German sovereign depends only on God and the sword. With such a conception of power it would be unjuridical to the highest degree to allow the Emperor to escape responsibility for his action—the decision belonged to him alone—its responsibility for violation of Belgian neutrality, which was willed by him, responsibility for acts of terrorism by his troops, which he willed and ordered."

The report quotes a letter from the ex-Emperor to the Emperor of Austria in the early days of the war, in which the German Emperor wrote:

"My soul is torn asunder, but everything must be put to fire and blood. The throats of men and women, children and the aged, must be cut, and not a tree nor a house left standing.

"With such methods of terror, which alone can strike so degenerate a people as the French, the war will finish before two months, while, if I use humanitarian methods, it may prolong for years. Despite all my repugnance, I have had to choose the first system."

The words "I" and "My" in the letter are italicized in the report.

"Modern law," the report continues, "does not recognize irresponsible authorities, even at the summit of hierarchy. It brings a State down from its pedestal and makes it submit to the rule of the Judge.

"There can, therefore, be no question of saving from the Judge a man who is at the summit of hierarchy, either by the application of internal law or of international law."

His Health Greatly Improved.

AMERONGEN, Holland, Jan. 19, (Associated Press.)—William Hohenzollern, the former German Emperor, is greatly improved in health. He is able to walk in the castle grounds in the morning and afternoon. In the evening he enjoys a parlor concert in the castle, where three members of his suite perform on the piano, harp, and violoncello.

Apparently his only distraction is the week-end official visit from the secretary of the Dutch Premier and the Governor of Utrecht, Count Lydnen Van Sandenburg, who are charged with surveillance over the former monarch.

OUR LEAGUE PLAN READY

Details May Be Presented to the Supreme Council Today.

CONFERENCE WITH WILSON

POST OF HONOR FOR LANSING

He Will Preside as Alternate for Clemenceau, Leaving Wilson Free Action.

PARIS, Jan. 19, (Associated Press.)—Pending the call for the next plenary session of the Peace Conference, which has been adjourned without date, the Supreme Council will meet tomorrow to continue work on the program, and, in the execution of the promise of M. Clemenceau that the question of a League of Nations would take first place, it will endeavor to weld together some of the projects which have been under separate consideration by different delegations. If it is impossible to reduce them to one plan, it is expected that they will be classified and put into compact form for consideration by the conference as early as possible.

The American delegation will take the initiative in this work, and tomorrow will lay what may be called the American plan before the council, if the council is ready to take it up.

Callers at the Paris White House today were Senator Léon Bourgeois, the League of Nations specialists on the French Peace Delegation; Lord Robert Cecil, who occupies a similar post for the British, and General Jan Christian Smuts, the South African leader, who also has a plan for a Society of Nations.

President Wilson thus had an opportunity to discuss the French and British points of view on this question and to get further ahead with the work of reconciling the different projects with his own ideas.

Conference Working Smoothly.

The machinery prepared for the first session of the conference Saturday functioned so perfectly and smoothly that few persons unacquainted with secretarial methods in conducting such international gatherings realized just what was being done and what had been accomplished when M. Clemenceau, permanent Chairman of the conference, abruptly announced the adjournment of the session.

In fact, the conference not only effected its organization, but it actually embarked upon the execution of a most ambitious program in the adoption of what officially is designated as the "agenda," which in plain English means "order of business."

Some of the delegates themselves expressed surprise at the precedence given in the program to such subjects as responsibility for the war, and particularly at the prominence given international labor problems, while such important subjects as the League of Nations and freedom of the seas did not appear on the agenda.

It was pointed out today that the absence of these subjects from the program was not due either to oversight or a desire to delay their consideration and that no delay would result. Topics on the order of business have been almost automatically referred to various delegations, which will report on them as soon as they are ready.

Meantime the Peace Conference itself may concentrate its attention on other questions, especially the League of Nations, which M. Clemenceau in his address said would be first in order.

The method thus adopted is expected to advance rather than to delay action on the most important questions.

Big Powers Only in All Sittings.

The nations composing the Supreme Council, according to the regulations, are to take part in all the sittings, while the other nations are to be represented only when questions in which they are especially interested are discussed.

The conference has solved the delicate question of etiquette in selecting four Vice Presidents, who are to preside in turn in the absence of M. Clemenceau. Secretary Lansing has been chosen to act in this capacity for the American delegation, which will leave

President Wilson free to come and go at will on the floor of the conference, and, it was said today, even to depart for the United States without sacrificing any advantage to America.

The machinery of the Peace Conference set in motion formally on the anniversary of the Treaty of Paris called forth from the Paris newspapers articles contrasting the military character of the Prussian victory with the democracy displayed yesterday without formality or military pomp.

President Poincaré's phrase, "You hold in your hands the future of the world," is seen to captivate all the French journals, which printed it in large headlines, while President Wilson is seen to occupy the most important rôle.

In the effusive descriptions of the session President Poincaré's tribute to the part played by the United States in the war receives much display. The Matin subheaded its article "To save civilization."

Clemenceau Presides Today.

When the delegates of the five great powers meet tomorrow in Stephen Pichon's office the Foreign Minister will transfer the presidency which he has hitherto exercised at these meetings to Premier Clemenceau. This meeting will occupy the whole day, being interrupted only by a luncheon given by the Senate in honor of President Wilson.

The subject of the discussion at the meeting will be an examination of the situation in Russia.

Tomorrow's session at the Foreign Office will be attended by the full Japanese delegation, Baron Nobuaki Makino, chief of the Japanese mission, having arrived in Paris yesterday evening with representatives of the Japanese Army and Navy, secretaries, and Commercial Commissioners. The Baron made an official call this morning on Premier Clemenceau and Foreign Minister Pichon.

President Wilson remained at home in the Murat mansion this morning. He spent the forenoon resting or working in his study.

CHINESE SUSPECT MALICE.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PEKING, Jan. 19.—The Chinese are astonished at reports emanating from Paris and America that China will be represented at the Peace Conference by Japan. The republic will have its own delegation, and the reports are regarded here as a malevolent attempt to injure China's cause.

The Chinese keenly resent any suggestion that Japan will represent their interests at the conference.

MARSEILLES, Jan. 19.—The program which China will defend at the Paris Peace Conference is outlined in an article published in the Echo de Chine. This program is of great importance for the future of the Chinese Republic.

The principal question relates to the repossession of the territory of Kiao-Chau and Tsing-tao, the lease of Wei-hai-wei, the Chinese Eastern Railway, the revision of custom taxes and tariffs, the opening of Mongolia and Tibet to commerce, the restoration to China of the legal power formerly exercised by foreign Consuls, and many other points concerning the integrity and sovereignty of China.

CHERIF TO SPEAK FOR TURKS.

Liberals Assembled in Geneva Give Him Full Powers in Paris.

GENEVA, Jan. 19, (French Wireless Press.)—The congress of Turkish liberals assembled in this city has delegated Cherif Pasha to attend the Paris Peace Conference and has given him full powers to act. He has been instructed to present the rights and claims of the Turkish people, and also to take up the question of food for Turkey.

At the opening of the Turkish congress telegrams were dispatched to President Wilson and Premiers Clemenceau, Lloyd George, and Orlando.

SUPPORT PUBLICITY DEMAND.

Socialist Journalists of France Meet with Americans and British.

PARIS, Jan. 10, (Associated Press.)—Representatives of the American and British press today in the Chamber of Deputies met representatives of the syndicate of "The French Democratic Press," which is composed mostly of Socialist and other opposition newspapers. The French newspaper men thanked the American journalists for their attitude on the question of publicity for the proceedings of the Peace Conference, and declared that the regulations of the conference as published were unacceptable to them.

The French journalists also said they favored complete abolition of the censorship for France, as well as for the United States and Great Britain, and freedom to confer with the delegates to the Peace Conference, and also that they desired open sessions of the conference and the admission of at least one representative for each newspaper.

An effort will be made to call a fuller conference of the representatives of the press of all nations. The Socialist newspaper men today disavowed the expressions of other French journalists against open sessions of the conference. They said they were not present at the previous conference of the journalists, because they had not been invited or informed that such a meeting was to be held.

PRINCE OF HEDJAZ IN PARIS.

Feisal Wants an Arab Federation Under American Protection.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—Prince Feisal, a son of the King of the Hedjaz in Arabia, is in Paris awaiting instructions from his father concerning the appointment of two delegates to represent the kingdom at the Peace Conference. Colonel Lawrence, who accompanies the young Prince as aid, expects that Feisal himself will be chosen as the first delegate of the Kingdom of the Hedjaz in order to give greater weight to the important propositions to be submitted to the Conference.

This proposal will consist of the formation of a great federation of all the Arab States from the Red Sea to the Persian Gulf, free from any Turkish domination and under the protection of the United States.

"The Arabs of this most ancient race," said Prince Feisal, using Colonel Lawrence as interpreter, "desire to become the youngest independent State in Asia, and they appeal to America as the most powerful protector of the freedom of man."

ONE LAUGH OF THE DAY

It Came When Interpreter Misunderstood Lloyd George's "Grand Young Man of France."

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

Special Wireless and Cable Dispatches to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—The greatest deliberative conclave the world has ever known was inaugurated this afternoon in the Foreign Office at the Quai d'Orsay. There were more crown-wearing monarchs and greater pomp of ceremony at the Congress of Vienna more than a hundred years ago—two Presidents of republics in the plain black of modern conventional dress were the only chiefs of State at today's gathering—but never before has there been such an assemblage of great minds or interests and nationalities so widely varied.

The impressiveness of the whole affair—this first meting of the inter-allied Peace Conference—lay more in the democratic simplicity there than in any picturesque aspects that appealed to one's imagination.

The so-called Clock Chamber, where the formal opening of the Peace Conference took place, is a long room, with a high ceiling, decorated with that French regard to mixture of gold and warm coloring which is not unknown in the public buildings of America of a few decades ago. A great table had been aranged along three sides of the room, its lower end open to afford a passageway for those delegates whose seats were on the inside. In the window embrasures, through which the waning afternoon sun shed a feeble light, were desks for the secretaries of the conference, while in similar embrasures on the opposite side of the chamber, giving entrance to a large anteroom, sat a limited number of press representatives, admitted for this occasion by grace of the conferees, who had declined to be influenced by the request of the American, British, and Italian newspaper representatives that they be admitted to all sessions of the great peace gathering.

Behind this limited representation of the press, seated in the embrasures, stood several hundred others of the foreign journalistic contingent who had been sent to Paris to report the proceedings of the world's most important and influential statesmen.

Until a few minutes before the time set for the opening of the session the press delegation and a few conference officials were the only persons present in the cloakroom and adjoining apartment. Then the delegates began arriving rapidly, and the conference came to order promptly.

White and Bliss Early Arrivals.

Among the very first to arrive were Henry White, the American Commissioner, and André Tardieu, the delegate of France, who is Minister of Franco-American Affairs in the French Cabinet. Immediately after came General Bliss, the military member of the American delegation, whose khaki uniform, simple as it was, stood out strikingly among the frock-coated statesmen. This absence of military uniform and all military suggestion was, for such an occasion of great ceremony, one of the striking features of the whole affair. Admiral Benson, wearing the blue service uniform of the United States Navy, led a group of American spectators, including Edward N. Hurley and Herbert C. Hoover.

Then President Wilson came, and began a hand-shaking progress along one side of the room to his place at the top of the table. The greetings exchanged between Wilson and Clemenceau were particularly cordial.

In the minute or two that the general greetings were taking place I was reminded strongly of the opening day of the session in the Senate in Washington, when old acquaintances are renewed and new acquaintances are made.

But the setting was more like that of the spacious East Room of the White House than that of the Senate Chamber. The Clock Room reminded me strikingly of that dignified Presidential chamber, although its decorations are more ornate and full of color than those of the eighteenth century American simplicity which characterize the White House as restored to its original design under the inspiration of President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Once the delegates were seated, the proceedings began. It was just 3 o'clock when President Poincaré from the centre of the top table read his formal address of welcome. Next to him on the right was President Wilson and three members of the American Commission. Colonel House being absent on account of illness. To the left of M. Poincaré were the British delegates, with one notable exception, for Premier Lloyd George did not arrive until fifteen minutes after M. Poincaré had begun his speech.

The French delegation, with the grizzled Clemenceau at its head, was next to the American along the right side of the table, and then came the Italians, with the Belgians and Brazilians. Along the side below the British were the representatives of Canada, Australia, South Africa, and New Zealand, and then those of Japan and Bolivia. All these had places on the outer sides of the table.

The interior was occupied by the representatives of the smaller nationalities, an impressive array of many races from many parts of the world—Uruguay, Czechoslovakia, Portugal, Peru, Haiti, Greece, Cuba, Panama, Guatemala, Poland, Liberia, and Ecuador. China was represented among these last. It was brought forcibly to one's mind how universal had been the uprising against the menace of German militaristic autocracy.

Touches of Oriental Color.

Here and there a touch of color stood out among that mass of frockcoats. The two representatives of the Arab kingdom of Hedjaz, with their turbans and flowing robes, and the Maharajah of Bikanir in a British General's uniform, topped by a native headdress, were conspicuously picturesque.

All remained standing during the delivery of M. Poincaré's address. He spoke in French with occasional impressiveness. Not once was he interrupted by applause. The whole proceeding had a solemnity suggesting a religious ceremony. The feeling seemed to prevail among the entire audience that it would be out of keeping with the occasion to indulge in any demonstration. This silence and reserve made the first meeting of the Peace Conference assume the strangest aspect ever seen in any of the great public ceremonials that I had attended.

With all the delegates seated, the English translation of M. Poincaré's remarks was read. Then he withdrew, making the round of the great table and shaking hands with each delegate. While those within heard the sound of the salute as the President of the republic drove away, they saw Clemenceau, the Tiger of France, take his place at the head of the council board. He recognized Wilson, who in clear, measured tones nominated Clemenceau for permanent President, paying a high tribute to him as a statesman and a man.

The President appeared thoroughly at ease and spoke with clearness and distinction, although with no attempt at dramatic effect. It seemed strange to see him there addressing that momentous gathering, and the strangeness increased when the interpreter read the French translation of his words. However highly the French statesmen and spectators present appreciated his graceful references to their Premier, they followed the rule, that seemed to have been adopted by a telephathic understanding, of refraining from demonstrations of approval.

Premier Lloyd George seconded the President's motion that Clemenceau be elected presiding officer, referring to the latter as the "most vigorous, youthful, and forceful figure of all the many conferences I have attended."

First Laugh of the Congress.

While Captain Mantaux, one of the official interpreters, was putting the British Premier's remarks into French, he made a slip which provoked the first laugh of the conference. Parenthetically it may be mentioned that Captain Mantaux, who before the war was French professor at St. Paul's, a famous London school, speaks English without the trace of an accent, and his gift of memory, which enables him to reproduce from a few rough notes not merely the spirit, but practically the text of the discourses he has to put into French or English, as the case may be, is remarkable.

Baron Sonnino, the Italian Foreign Minister, spoke briefly in favor of the election of Clemenceau, which was then carried unanimously by a show of hands.

M. Clemenceau acknowledged the tribute paid him, emphasizing in the course of his remarks these points: That the conference was gathered together to build a new order; that the greater the crimes and devastation that had been committed in the war, the greater must be the reparation. The nucleus for a League of Nations, he said, was already at hand in the nations represented there, whose common ideal was to make a better and freer humanity. "We came here as friends; we must leave as brothers," he said. "Let us try to work well and work quickly."

Rising again after the close of his formal speech, M. Clemenceau called on the delegates to present papers dealing with the special interests of their respective nations, and announced that at the suggestion of Premier Lloyd George one of the early duties of the conference would be to determine the responsibility for the war and the special responsibility which attached to the ex-Kaiser. In adjourning the day's session he then announced that the League of Nations would be set at the head of the agenda of the next plenary sitting.

It was exactly 4:30 when the conference rose, bringing to an end one of the most impressive, as it was one of the most important, ceremonials in the history of mankind; yet the impressiveness in a way is difficult to define, for it was unattended by any striking or dramatic features which might have been expected and probably were expected by the many fortunate enough to attend it.

Lloyd George Knows His French.

PARIS, Jan. 18, (Associated Press.)—The cosmopolitan character of the gathering at the peace table today was no less striking than its atmosphere of democracy. There were Emirs from Arabia, Maharajahs from India, representatives of China and Siam, and mingled with them were men from South Africa and Australia and every quarter of the Old and New Worlds.

Premier Lloyd George of Great Britain demonstrated his understanding of the French language during the session. In his address seconding President Wilson's speech nominating Premier Clemenceau as President of the Congress, Mr. Lloyd George referred to the French statesman as "the grand young man of France." Inside the horseshoe sat Captain Mantoux, interpreter. When he read a French translation of Lloyd George's address he construed the phrase as "the grand old man of France." The British Premier at once protested against the translation, which was changed amid the laughter of the delegates.

WILSON'S WORD TO SWISS.

Says He Is Proud to Represent the Cause of Justice for Them.

BERNE, Jan. 19.—President Wilson has sent from Paris a telegram to the Swiss President thanking the latter for the message which Mr. Wilson received on returning to Paris from Italy. Mr. Wilson says the confidence placed by Switzerland in the sister republic beyond the ocean is particularly pleasing, and adds:

"You can feel sure I shall always be proud to represent the cause of justice for Switzerland in every possible way."

Section VII.

A secretariat, appointed from outside the plenipotentiaries, composed of one representative of the United States of America, one of the British Empire, one of France, one of Italy, and one of Japan, will be submitted to the approval of the Conference by the President, who will be the controlling authority responsible for its operations.

This secretariat will be intrusted with the care of drafting the protocols of the meeting, of classifying the archives, of providing for the administration and organisation of the Conference and generally of insuring the regular and punctual working of the service intrusted to it. The head of the secretariat shall have charge of and be responsible for the protocols and archives.

Section VIII.

The publicity of the proceedings shall be insured by official communiqués prepared by the secretariat and made public. In case of disagreement as to the drafting of these communiqués, the matter shall be referred to the principal plenipotentiaries or their representatives.

Section IX.

Reserved.

Section X.

All documents intended for inclusion in the protocols must be handed in in writing by the plenipotentiaries presenting them. No document or proposition may be submitted save by one of the plenipotentiaries or in his name.

Section XI.

Plenipotentiaries wishing to make a proposal not connected with the question on the agenda or not arising from the discussion, shall give notice of the same twenty-four hours in advance, in order to facilitate the discussions. However, exceptions can be made to this rule in the case of amendments or secondary questions, but not in the case of substantive proposals.

Section XII.

Petitions, memoranda, observations or documents forwarded to the conference by any persons other than plenipotentiaries must be received and classified by the secretariat. Such of these communications as are just political will be briefly summarized in a line to be distributed to all the plenipotentiaries. This list will be kept up to date as analagous communications are received. All such documents will be deposited in the archives.

Section XIII.

The discussion of the question to be decided will comprise a first and second reading. The first will consist of the general subject, with the object of obtaining an agreement on matters of importance. Subsequently there will be a second reading for a more detailed examination.

Section XIV.

The plenipotentiaries shall have the right, subject to the agreement with the Conference, to authorize their technical delegates to submit technical explanations on such points as may be deemed lawful.

If the Conference thinks advisable, the technical examinations of any particular question may be intrusted to a committee of technical delegates, whose duty will be to report and suggest solutions.

Section XV.

The protocols drawn up by the secretariat shall be printed and distributed in proof to the delegates in the shortest possible time. To expedite the work by the Conference, the communications thus made in advance shall take the place of the reading of the protocols at the beginning of each meeting. If no alteration is proposed by the plenipotentiaries, the text shall be deemed approved and entered in the archives.

If any alteration is proposed, its text shall be read by the President at the beginning of the following meeting. In any case the protocol must be read out in full at the request of any plenipotentiary.

Section XVI.

A committee shall be formed for drafting the resolutions adopted. This committee shall concern itself only with questions which have been decided. Its solo duty shall be to draw up the text of the decision adopted and to present it for the approval of the Conference.

It shall be composed of five members not forming part of the plenipotentiary delegates and composed of one representative of the United States of America, one of the British Empire, one of France, one of Italy, and one of Japan.

PEACE SESSION STAGED WITH FRENCH DECORUM

No Jarring Note Throughout the Whole Proceedings of the First Day.

By ERNEST MARSHALL.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—The French have long been recognized as the greatest stage managers in the world, and the stage was set for today's opening session of the Peace Conference with full appreciation of the decorum and dignity that should attend the proceedings out of which, as Clemenceau said, a new order may be evolved. From start to finish there was not a single word—let alone an incident—that fell below the high level on which the conference opened. The beautiful statue of Liberty, which stands at the end of the Salle de l'Horloge in which the conference met, was no more impressive than the atmosphere of high endeavor and determination to reach a peace of justice and safety which pervaded the hall.

Nor, in another sense, was anything more impressive than the manner in which it was announced that the first place on the agenda of the next plenary session had been assigned to the question of the League of Nations, which, as the fundamental ideal determining the direction in which the conference should work, was acquiesced in, even if not vehemently advocated, by Premier Clemenceau.

With the congress sitting in France under a French President, it was not to be wondered at that at today's proceedings emphasis should have been laid on the point of reparation for the devastation done to this country; but there was nothing said or done to suggest that the hopes which are based on the League of Nations are to be relegated to the limbo of unrealizable things.

MORGENTHAU'S WARNING.

Tells Public to Beware of Turkish Propaganda Now.

Turkey was pictured as incapable of reform by Henry Morgenthau, former Ambassador to that country, in an address before the Free Synagogue yesterday, in which he asserted that the public must beware of the pro-Turkish propaganda, making its sentimental appeal, which is more and more apparent as the day for a solution of the Turkish question in the peace conference draws near.

"Does the approaching peace conference intend to repeat history, and to solve the Eastern question in the old fanullar way, or does it really intend to dispose of the Turkish question for good and all?" Mr. Morgenthau asked. "If there were any excuse for the treaties of 1856 and 1878 there is certainly no excuse for any similar treaties now. The fear of Russian aggression has been the mainspring of British policy in all these earlier crises. The Russian terror has disappeared. England no longer fears a Russia stationed at Constantinople and threatening her Eastern possessions, or securing control of the Mediterranean. The once mighty autocracy is now mightily absorbed in solving its own internal problems.

"Fortunately Lloyd George and his associates who are now in power have adopted Gladstone's idea of public right as the governing idea of European politics and have adopted the ideals of foreign policy so ably represented by Cobden and Bright. Moreover, the British conscience has changed since the days of the Crimean and Russo-Turkish wars. The old-time attitude which insisted on regarding these problems from the standpoint of fancied national interest, is every day giving place to a more humanitarian policy.

"There are still plenty of reactionaries in England and Europe that might like to settle the Ottoman problem in the old discredited way, but they do not govern British public life at the present crisis. The England that will deal with the Ottoman Empire in 1919 is the England of Lloyd George, not the England of Palmerston and Disraeli."

Large Selling Organization (Rated Aa-A1) invites additional lines

MANY manufacturers, whose lines we handle today, have found in our distributive facilities, organization, warehouses and standing, a most satisfactory solution of their selling problem.

With largely expanded domestic and foreign facilities, we can efficiently handle additional lines on consignment or otherwise—possibly yours.

Satisfaction to the manufacturer, we consider equally important with satisfaction to ourselves.

THE FIELD WE COVER

Industry from the mechanical side is our primary field. Wherever manufacturing is done, we already sell a large range of mill supplies, from engines, machinery and transmission down to valves, wrenches and files. In addition to this broad field, we cover intensively many special fields—for instance, railroads, ship-builders, collieries, elevators, warehouses. We reach the large purchasing agent and the small, also the buyer over the counter.

FACILITIES WE OFFER

Twenty warehouses in leading American cities, firmly established, well organized, for stock, sale wholesale and retail.
400 travelling salesmen trained in technical lines.
Warehouses in London, Glasgow, Paris and Havana, and resident salesmen in principal cities of the world.
A business today whose volume amounts to many millions of dollars.
A merchandise standard which insists on quality as the first essential.
A reputation of long standing and, we believe, unexcelled.

WE INVITE CORRESPONDENCE from manufacturers in our field, whose lines admit of a volume of from $250,000 and up—and whose reputation for quality and integrity will match our own.

AMERICA TO USE LINER IMPERATOR

Giant Steamer Among the German Shipping Allotted to the United States.

1,000,000 TONS READY NOW

Hurley Expeditious in Dealing with Germans, but Delegates Eagerly Shake His Hand.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—Twenty-seven hours prior to the opening of the Peace Conference today there had been held at Treves the first civilian conference since the beginning of the war between Germans and representatives of the countries which had defeated her. The honor of conducting this meeting fell to an American, Edward N. Hurley, head of the Shipping Board.

The result of it was that America and the Allies will get 3,000,000 tons of German shipping now in German ports to be used to transport food to Europe and to carry home American and Australian soldiers. This agreement, which the Germans seemed glad enough to make, is to last at least to the end of the final prolongation period of the armistice, and what will be done with the ships then has not yet been decided.

Another matter to be determined later is what Germany will receive in pay for the use of these ships. The rate will be the average current rate for the use of ships now existing, which will be estimated soon. The money Germany receives from this source she must expend on account of such food supplies as may be sent to her in the transferred ships.

The main fact is that America and the allies now get 2,300,000 tons of cargo ships and 700,000 tons of passenger ships. All the passenger ships will be ready immediately.

They will all be used half and half as tonnage by America and England for transports. England will take the smaller vessels because they are to be sent through the Suez Canal on the voyage to Australia. America will take the larger ships, of which the Imperator is the biggest. This new passenger tonnage for the United States will increase the number of soldiers she can send home each month by 70,000.

Of the 2,300,000 cargo tonnage, 1,000,000 is ready for immediate use. The rest soon will be. All these craft are in German ports, chiefly Bremen and Hamburg. Some smaller vessels in the Baltic will be placed at the disposal of Germany herself to carry on her coasting trade. She will be allowed to man these with her own sailors, but all the other ships taken will be manned by sailors from the American and British Navies.

The chief request the German delegates at Treves made was that all the ships, even including those to transport troops to America and Australia, be manned by German seamen. This request, of course, was flatly refused.

So much for the material facts of this transaction. But in addition Americans in Paris attach much psychological importance to the fact that the beginning of civil and economic agreements with Germany has actually been made. It was very evident that the Germans themselves were delighted to make such a beginning. They declared the German people insisted that they give up these ships to help in the work of transportation of food to Europe, but the delegates assured the German conferees that Germany would not be enabled to get all the food she needed thereby, and must not expect it. Other countries in greater need and not responsible for the war will have greater consideration, but Germany will get such fats and grains as she absolutely needs.

This civilian conference was authorized and arranged for by Foch, who chose Treves and limited the time to exactly three days. Mr. Hurley was elected Chairman by his American, British, French, and Italian associates on the mission, and Erzeberger, in charge of the German delegation, was told by Foch that Hurley was the man who would rule the proceedings. There was ample business discussion, but it was protected by the strictest formality, which precluded anything in the way of casual talk about the war, peace, or anything not strictly part of the business in hand.

Needless to say there was no effort on either side at fraternizing. The American and allied delegates were seated on one side of a long, very narrow table when the Germans were ushered in. They all rose and bowed. Chairman Hurley, in the centre, put out his hand to point to chairs opposite by way of inviting the Germans to sit down. The Germans opposite grabbed Hurley's hand and shook it. That was the only handshake in the course of the three-day conference, which ended at thirty minutes after noon yesterday. The delegates arrived in Paris today.

TO FREE SOME GERMANS.

Foch Says the More Deserving Ones May Be Liberated.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 19.—Replying to a letter from Mathias Erzberger, the head of the German armistice delegation, urging the return of German prisoners of war and the relaxation of trade restrictions between occupied and unoccupied Germany, Marshal Foch, in a letter dated Jan. 16, said he intended to recommend the return of prisoners most deserving sympathy and was prepared to permit an exchange of food between occupied and unoccupied Germany to an extent which would obviate unemployment and consequent disturbances.

PROTECTION OF LABOR ON PEACE SCHEDULE

PARIS, Jan. 19.—The possibility that the demand for labor in debt-crushed European countries may cause a slackening of the laws for the protection of workers will be the starting point of the consideration of the subject of international labor, which was placed yesterday on the conference program after responsibility for the war and punishment of the crimes committed during hostilities.

The Conference, recognizing the interdependence of all nations, will base its discussion of the subject on the work of the Leeds Labor Conference in July, 1916, which approved the resolution introduced by Leon Jouhaux, then secretary of the French Federation of Labor, declaring that the peace treaty should "insure to the labor classes of every country, free from international capitalistic competition, a minimum of moral and material guarantees relative to the following points:

"Right of employment, right of labor organization, change of residence, social insurance, proper hygienic conditions, freedom to work in any country where employment is available under equal conditions with its citizens, institution in all countries of sickness, accident, unemployment and old age insurance, prohibition of labor by children under fourteen years of age, prohibition of night work for women and for adolescents under eighteen, broadening of legislation to insure the health and safety of workers and the creation of both national and international bodies to study, codify and interpret laws affecting labor conditions."

This program, communicated through the Scandinavian Trades Union at Berne in October, 1917, by the representatives of labor organizations in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Bohemia, Bulgaria, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, and Switzerland, was approved by all of them.

It is recalled that the American Federation of Labor voted for parts of this program at Buffalo, and that the statement of the war aims of the British Labor Party contemplated an International Labor Council with similar objects.

In some points the program to be submitted to the Peace Conference approaches that of the International Socialist Conference, which is to meet next week at Berne, but unlike that of the Socialists, it is confined to remedial measures applied to specific problems.

WILSON'S PROGRAM AS LIMIT.

German Peace Delegates Will Refuse All Other Demands.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—A German wireless dispatch received here today announcing the formation of a German delegation to attend the Peace Conference in Paris says the delegation will confer regarding the formation of a new Germany. The Government in discussing the question was agreed that everything must be done to carry out the stipulations within the limitations of President Wilson's program, and the delegation must decline demands exceeding that program.

After giving the points as wired from Paris, the dispatch says the delegation will have to support an immediate mutual arrangement based upon justice for imports of raw materials and foodstuffs and also strive to provide for a future economic rapprochement with the nations on conditions as far as possible equitable.

The dispatch concludes by saying that the attention of the German representatives had been drawn finally to the establishment of a League of Nations in the spirit of President Wilson's proposals and also in connection therewith to the setting up of an international court of arbitration, because only by this means can a state of lasting peace be guaranteed.

WILSON'S BELGIAN TRIP

Deferred Till He Starts for Home—He May Visit French Ruined Zone Earlier.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—All arrangements have been made for President Wilson's visits to the American battlefields and to some of the devastated regions of northern France, but the time has not been fixed. The visits will depend wholly upon the proceduro of the Peace Conference and the turn of affairs in the meetings.

The President probably will travel by train, having army motor cars meet him at different points for a tour of the region surrounding the stopping places.

It now appears that his visit to Brussels will be deferred until he is ready to depart for home. One plan under consideration is for Mr. Wilson to leave Paris on a special train which will carry the whole Presidential party to the Belgian capital. From there the President may go directly to Calais without returning to Paris, crossing the English Channel and sailing from some English port.

LYNCHINGS SHOCK PEOPLE OF BERLIN

WOMEN NOW ARE SEARCHED

Soldiers Seize Armed Sailor Masquerading as a Woman Outside the Eden Hotel.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 17, (via Copenhagen, Jan. 18.)—Doubtless the German people will breathe more freely after the removal of the Spartacus danger incorporated in the persons of Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, but the press, with the exception of the Pan German organs, and even more so the general public, deeply regret what the Vorwärts characterizes as the case of a lynching "worthy of the wildest West."

"What will they think of us in the rest of the world now? Why must they thus justify the name of Hun?" are expressions you hear on all sides.

The socialistic organs declare that the "hysterical sons and daughters of bourgeois war profiteers and friends of reaction who populate the vicinity of the Eden Hotel are responsible," to which the Tageblatt sharply replies that millionaires are not in the habit of stealing corpses and mixing in street fights.

The demand for prompt investigation is general, the Pan Germans alone excepted. The military authorities, who are now pretty well in control of the whole city, have already instituted proceedings and suspended the officer in charge of the Eden Hotel, but so far as is ascertainable neither he nor his men seem to be to blame, because the mob overwhelmed them so suddenly and pressed them in such masses that they could not make use of their arms.

The Freiheit and Rote Fahne insist that the case be taken out of the hands of the military and placed before a civil court at which all groups of Socialists shall be represented. The two Red organs also call a general strike as a demonstration against the lynching.

It is too early yet to say with what success. If the summons should be obeyed, this will surely lead to encounters with the military, who hold all points of vantage, and much blood may be shed. Most likely the Government will appoint a civil court investigation.

The Freiheit contends that Liebknecht was not shot from behind while fleeing, but was stood against a tree and fired at in front, as is shown by the bullet marks, for he had his right breast and right upper arm pierced. THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent is informed, however, that all three bullets passed clear through the body, and that the Freiheit's informant mistook the marks of egress for those of ingress. Quite illogically the Freiheit then proceeds to accuse the military of negligence if they permitted Liebknecht to have the knife with which he wounded the hand of a soldier when the latter tried to prevent the anarchist's escape.

Rosa Luxemburg's body has not been discovered, despite the closest search in the Landwehr Canal and the Tiergarten, in either of which it is supposed to have been thrown. There is no reliable evidence either that the Spartacides snatched it. Indeed, it is not even certain that Rosa was dead when torn from the auto.

The soldier sitting by her side was so bewildered by the rapid succession of extraordinary events that he could not say with certainty where she was shot, but thought it was in the neck just above the chest. Her assailant, the soldier says, wore a dark overcoat and eyeglasses. He had fired and jumped off before the soldier could grab his arm. This happened on Kurfuersten Damm.

The auto was speeding south, but the crowds massed so quickly that the guards thought it best to turn and reach Moabit by another route. At Hitzig Strasse the auto was stopped by the command to halt. The guard, believing it was a military patrol whose duty it was to search all vehicles passing certain points, stopped. "It's Red Rosa," some one cried, this being the name by which Luxemburg was known by her partisans.

Like a wave the tumultuous masses rushed on, some seeming friendly and some wrathful. The soldiers were lifted from the car, some being thrown to the ground. A few seconds later all was over. The soldiers found themselves, more or less bruised, alone with the empty car, while the howling human wave was receding toward the canal.

In consequence of the threats of the Independents and Spartacides the military are preparing for every emergency. The streets are patrolled unceasingly and field guns have been placed in position in many public squares. At certain points all persons must submit to a more or less close search, according to sex, for females are no longer permitted to pass unmolested.

Since last night three women have been caught with many rounds of cartridges hidden under their cloaks. Another elegantly dressed person observed parading in front of the Eden Hotel attracted the suspicion of the soldiers on patrol. When she noticed that she was observed she fled. She was captured and taken to the Eden Hotel, where the prisoner proved to be a young sailor disguised as a girl. He carried a heavy revolver in a satchel. He refused to make any statement about himself or his purpose.

An annuity of 200,000 marks has been awarded to the King of Wurttemberg. In the event of his death his widow is to receive a yearly allowance of 100,000 marks. All payments comprised in the civil list have ceased. The castle at Bebenhausen will be the King's residence in future. All other royal castles become State property, and notice has been given to the members of the royal family to evacuate them.

The Zeppelin firm, with offices in Berlin, known as the Deutsche Luftreere, has just obtained a concession for air traffic, operating in conjunction with the Hamburg-American Line. It is not known yet whether a new type of Zeppelin is to be employed in the air service, or the latter confined to airplanes also manufactured at Friedrichshafen. At present the firm offers airplanes for election propaganda, and announces a regular mail, express, and passenger service by large flying machines, with two depots in Berlin.

FRENCH TO KEEP UP 'Y' HUTS

Government Will Open Foyers du Soldat in Many Towns.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—Permanent maintenance of the Y. M. C. A. huts which were established throughout France to serve the French soldiers, and the erection of scores, possibly hundreds, of additional ones, has been decided upon at the request of the French Government.

Every corner of France is to have its foyer du soldat. The French War Department is sending post card inquiries to 200,000 villages asking the authorities of each community questions touching the advisability of establishing a foyer in that particular locality, and the community's willingness to co-operate. Under the general plan the communities, with Governmental assistance, will provide the land and labor necessary for the construction of the buildings, the foyers du soldat supplying the materials. The Y. M. C. A. will open each centre and maintain it until the community is prepared to take it over.

May Not Call Assembly.

AMSTERDAM Jan. 19.—The Lokal-Anzeiger of Berlin says it learns the Ebert-Scheidemann Government has finally decided not to hold the National Assembly for which elections are going on today, and which it had been announced would be convoked for Feb. 16.

The appeal issued by the Independent Socialists of Berlin for a general strike in consequence of the deaths of Dr. Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, the Spartacan leaders, proved unsuccessful, according to a dispatch from the German capital.

Four Spartacan leaders who were arrested during the recent disorders in Spandau were shot and killed by escorting troops when they tried to escape on Friday night.

BERLIN, Jan. 18, (Via Copenhagen, Jan. 19.)—Unless all signs are deceiving tomorrow's elections will pass without serious trouble in Berlin, the military now having the situation well in hand.

More than ten thousand rifles have been collected in private houses in Moabit alone. Today the search extended to North Berlin, largely inhabited by laboring classes. A call for a general strike and street demonstrations as a protest against the killing of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg issued by the Freiheit and Rote Fahne had no result whatever. There has been only desultory shooting during the last few days.

What an old tin box disclosed

One danger of bequeathing money in bulk

THE elderly lady who opened her old tin box of securities is quite willing that we give the following facts:

She is a gentlewoman over 60 years of age. She has never shown money sense. Fifteen years ago she inherited the family estate of close to a hundred thousand dollars.

Financially, at that time, her future looked rosy.

On the advice of a friend of the family, she at once invested everything, as follows:

Oil stocks (two companies)	$27,000
Mining stocks (four companies)	32,000
A city house (paid for outright)	17,500
Deposited in several savings banks	18,000
	$94,500

She was led to believe her income would amount to $5,500 a year.

The mining stocks yielded handsome dividends for a few years, then dwindled, then stopped. From the oil stocks she fared worse. Journeys to the savings banks became more frequent. Later she rented her home—finally mortgaged it.

Today the net income from the estate is a bare $600. The gentlewoman, as we said, is past sixty. We understand she now paints china a little and sells what she can.

One day she opened an old tin box and in an embarrassed way exhibited the bundle of worthless stock certificates. That is how we learned the story.

As business men, perhaps it is not our place to moralize. But we do know that such money waste is morally wrong and should be and can be made impossible by definite safety measures.

In that spirit we bring to your attention—

THIRD ARMY IGNORED LUXEMBURG REBELS

French Agency Circulates False Rumor That Our Soldiers Quelled Revolt.

COLONEL REBUKED LEADERS

Silenced Talk of Riot If Pershing Stood on Balcony with the Duchess at Review.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE AMERICAN ARMY OF OCCUPATION, COBLENZ, Jan. 18.—I have received the following:

"The Havas Agency in Paris has received a cable from New York that THE NEW YORK TIMES has printed a story to the effect that a rumor is current in New York that the American Army on its entry into Luxemburg suppressed a movement then in progress directed against the existing Government.

"THE NEW YORK TIMES goes on to say that it is no part of the work of the Army of Occupation to engage in such matters, and if this story is true the Army of Occupation should be on guard against any effort to stifle free expression of local populations relative to the form of government which they desire."

[THE NEW YORK TIMES has not printed any such story.]

It cannot be too emphatically stated that the rumor referred to is false. The facts in the case would have to be directly reversed to put the Army of Occupation in the light of interfering in Luxemburg politics. The command not only of the Third Army, but of the American Expeditionary Force, agrees precisely with THE TIMES that an army of occupation should in no way interfere with the free political expression of people, and at the start of its march to the Rhine an order was issued that irrespective of its sympathies the Army of Occupation should in every case deal with the actual Government it found on the spot and should in no case interfere in any local politics or movements in Luxemburg or Germany.

Birth of the Rumor.

I know well the genesis of this mischievous and dangerous rumor, spread doubtless by some thoughtless soldier or officer reaching home. From personal knowledge I give the facts. Three days before our entrance into the Duchy of Luxemburg officers attached to General Pershing's staff made arrangements for a parade of American troops through the capital of the little nation.

In the nature of things, there was to be a review, and naturally, marching through a neutral sovereign country, the head of the Government was asked to review the troops with the American Commander, and, naturally enough, it was decided to review them from the balcony of the Ducal Palace, where Luxemburg reviews generally take place.

I can state that General Pershing personally knew nothing of these arrangements at the time of their making and left them to his staff, he being occupied with more important matters.

In the meanwhile, revolutionary leaders in Luxemburg had decided that the entry of Pershing's troops into the capital was a good time for a demonstration against the Duchess. She being a representative of royalty, and Pershing being a representative of democracy, these leaders set about getting him to help oust the Duchess. In furtherance of their plans these revolutionary leaders went to General Pershing's staff and lamented the fact that he was to stand on the balcony with the Duchess because that would hurt their cause. They said he should refuse to stand there, even though plans had already been announced. They said that if he did stand side by side with the Duchess there might be a riot.

American Colonel's Retort.

Now, the Colonel to whom these men talked is a practical soldier man. He saw no international complications. He saw a crowd of civilians threatening to make a riot while his Commander in Chief was about and incidentally upsetting plans which he, the Colonel, had made for General Pershing. So he said to the leader of the delegation: "Friend, you go on back home and, remember, if there is any riot you are likely to be among the casualties."

The next day General Pershing stood on the balcony of the palace with Duchess Adelaide and reviewed the 18th Infantry and nothing untoward happened. Not until afterward did he even know that revolutionaries had tried to change his plan. The Colonel in charge had not thought it important enough to bother the Commander in Chief with, and I can state that had the General known the whole story it would have made no difference in his plans.

After that regiment marched through the town it left, and during the two weeks we were in the Duchy of Luxemburg no American soldiers were kept in the capital, and those who went there on leave or on business went unarmed, under General Pershing's orders. We had no police in the town, in fact, left it strictly alone. Any day revolutions wanted to go ahead we would not have interfered.

Those, then, are the facts. It cannot be said that the American Army suppressed any free expression of local populations. The only potent factor was a refusal by General Pershing's staff to change his plans. Had they done so certainly the Americans could have been accused of messing into things.

Army Did Not Interfere.

I was in Luxemburg for the two weeks our troops were in the duchy, and at no time did we take over any functions of government or exert any influence one way or another on the local political situation save for the one day when the General's staff refused to make him an agent of the revolutionary party.

It is a mischievous rumor that twists these facts into a statement that our army suppressed a revolution against Duchess Adelaide. It is peculiarly mischievous at this time when the Luxemburg disturbances have brought the little duchy into the world limelight and when the inhabitants are making accusations of outside interference. It is peculiarly unfortunate that the French news agency should be able to publish a rumor that Americans interfered.

NEW TRIAL ORDERED FOR DR. KARL HAU

New Evidence in Case of German Sentenced to Life for Murder.

ONCE LIVED IN THIS CITY

Accused of Luring His Mother-in-Law to Lonely Street in Baden Baden and Killing Her.

BERLIN, Jan. 19.—Karl Hau, once a practising physician in New York, who years ago was sentenced to life imprisonment for murdering his mother-in-law, a widow, Frau Molitor, of Baden-Baden, will be released within a few days. An order has been issued permitting his case to be reconsidered because of new evidence discovered which may prove his innocence.

Karl Hau, alias Stau, was arrested in London in November, 1906, charged with the murder of his mother-in-law, Frau Molitor, at Baden-Baden earlier in the same month. He was extradited to Germany, and, the court at Karlsruhe having ordered an examination of his mental condition, he was examined by the University clinic at Freiburg, where he had been a student, and was pronounced sane. He was removed to Baden-Baden in April, 1906, and his trial set for the same month.

Hau was born in Germany 39 years ago. His father was wealthy and a former member of the Reichstag, and his mother was a baroness. While a student about nineteen years old, Hau eloped with Fraulein Lena Molitor, daughter of the court physician of the Grand Duke of Baden. She was six years his senior.

In 1903 Hau came to America with his wife and young daughter. He entered Washington University, Washington, D. C., and was graduated there with the degrees of A. M. and LL. B. His father was appointed Professor of Roman Law at the university and about the same time was admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia and took up active practice.

According to the accounts of the Hau trial, he lured his mother-in-law, by means of a telephone message purporting to come from the Baden-Baden Post Office, to a lonely street and there shot her in the heart. He wore a false beard at the time, and thus disguised fled to Frankfort and then to London. Soon after his arrest his wife asked that an inquiry be made as to her husband's disposal of her dowery of $50,000 which he had been keeping. No trace of the money was found, and on June 8, 1907, she committed suicide by drowning in a lake near Pfaeffikon, Canton of Zurich, Switzerland. Hau's trial terminated on July 23, 1907, after a most sensational fight, in a verdict of guilty. He was sentenced to die, but this was commuted to life imprisonment. In January, 1910, he nearly made his escape from the Bruchsal prison in Berlin.

STORMS DELAY ROCHAMBEAU

Liner with Troops to Get Coal and Supplies at Halifax.

HALIFAX, Jan. 19.—The French liner Rochambeau, which left Bordeaux for New York on Jan. 8, with 883 American troops, will put in here tomorrow for coal and supplies, according to a message from the Rochambeau's Captain received tonight at the local office of the Campagnie Générale Transatlantique.

The shortage of food and fuel was occasioned by rough weather, which delayed the crossing.

ITALY'S NEW CABINET OFFICIALLY ANNOUNCED

Villa in Post of Vice Premier, Created During Absence of Premier Orlando.

ROME, Jan. 18.—The official communication issued today announcing that the Ministers had placed their portfolios at the disposition of the Premier for a reconstruction of the Cabinet said:

"King Victor Emmanuel accepted the resignations of Signor Sacchi, Minister of Justice; Signor Nitti, Minister of the Treasury; Signor Miliani, Minister of Agriculture, and Signor Villa, Minister of Transport. He has designated Signor Fasta, former Minister of Finance, to be Minister of Justice; Signor Stringher to be Minister of the Treasury, General Caviglia as Minister of War, General Girardini to be Minister of Pensions, Signor Riccio, former Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, to be Minister of Agriculture, and Signor de Nava, a member of the Boselli Ministry, to be Minister of Transport.

"There has been created a post of Vice Premier during the absence of Premier Orlando. Signor Villa has been designated for this place. A Ministry of Reconstruction for invaded territory has been created and Signor Fradeletto, former Minister of Public Instruction, will be chief."

ITALY STILL NEEDING COAL.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The Fuel Administration made public tonight further information from the report of the commission which Mr. Garfield sent to Europe, which indicates that Italy was the worst sufferer from fuel shortage during the war.

Switzerland, which now faces a severe shortage, managed throughout the conflict to obtain coal from Germany. France is furnishing to Switzerland the tonnage Germany had allotted from Alsatian fields. Germany was Switzerland's chief source of supply before the war.

Belgium, the commission found, should be able to produce immediately more coal than needed for its own consumption.

Representatives of the Italian Government, the commission reports, urge an annual national supply of 13,000,000 tons to meet actual requirements, drawing attention to the fact that "while the people may suffer privation without protest in wartime," with the coming of peace a refusal to supply fuel "may give rise to serious disturbances."

CUTS COBLENZ LIGHTS.

Dickman, in Doing So, Repeats Wording of German Order of 1916.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY OF OCCUPATION, Jan. 18, (Associated Press.)—Owing to the insufficient fuel supply the consumption of electricity among the civil population of Coblenz is to be reduced by half. The American military authorities, in putting this order into effect, are using verbatim an order issued in 1916 by the German military authorities. General Dickman's order, which is published in the newspapers, is to become effective Monday and remain in force until the situation is improved.

After the armistice Coblenz quickly returned to the pre-war use of electricity, but recently the fuel shortage and the necessity for repairs to the power plants made a reduction in lights and power compulsory until the situation is remedied.

LUDENDORFF'S BOOK TO REVEAL TRUTH

Former General Has Placed Himself at Call of Ebert Government.

His History to Declare Facts Without Fear of Even Those of "Highest Rank."

BERLIN, Jan. 17.—Much capital was made by Socialist and Democratic orators against the former Pan German parties and Ludendorff's flight from his country after he had got it into the deepest distress.

Professor Schuecking at a Deutsche Democratic meeting at Harburg said the same might be expected of most of the leaders, and that the Junker parties were now masquerading as the Deutsche Volkspartie, and Deutsche National Volkspartie and even as leading lights of the Christliche Volkspartie. It was most curious that these three parties, whose interests were more or less just the contrary of those of the people, had selected the name of People's Party to hide their compromised characters. Ludendorff, once their god, he concluded, proved a deserter in time of deep distress. So would many other shining lights of Kaiserism if they only could.

Military friends of Ludendorff today publish a statement that the former Generalissimo had placed himself at the disposition of the Ebert-Scheidemann Government, but was requested to leave the country because the People's Commissioners felt unable to protect him against the wrath of the people. Ludendorff, they assert, has since notified the Government that he is willing to return whenever the People's Commissioners desire.

It is also denied that Ludendorff is in a state of mental collapse or that unbridgeable differences exist between him and Hindenburg, but it is not denied that he has ceased to be persona grata with the Kaiser ever since September. He is now writing a book, which they say will be an absolutely impartial history of his part in the war and which will reveal the truth without fear or favor, "even where persons of the highest rank are concerned."

THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent understands that the Lokal Anzeiger Company has been selected as publisher, but definite information is not obtainable.

Hindenburg's general army headquarters will be removed from Kassel to a point nearer the eastern frontier. The Polish war threatening the province of Brandenburg made it necessary to accumulate whatever forces might be gathered against the eastern danger.

VIENNA, Jan. 18, (Via Geneva, Jan. 19.)—The work of the American Commission under A. C. Coolidge is proceeding briskly. The members have had daily meetings with men prominent in the political and economical world of Vienna, gathering information. Today Count Czernin applied for an opportunity of meeting Professor Coolidge, who returns to Vienna from Budapest next Monday.

BUDAPEST, Jan. 15, (via Paris, Jan. 19.)—Since 10 o'clock this morning, when Archibald C. Coolidge, head of the American Political Mission, accompanied by E. M. Storey, Major Lawrence Martin, and Lieutenant Philip Goodwin, reached Budapest from Vienna, the Stars and Stripes for the first time since the war began are flying over the main entrance of the Ritz Hotel, where rooms were reserved for the guests by the Hungarian Government.

Side by side with the American colors float the Union Jack and the French and Hungarian flags, for the Ritz is the headquarters of the French and British military missions.

The Americans received a warm welcome when their special train arrived. Heading a big deputation of representatives of the Government was Secretary of State Ernest Balogsy, who greeted the mission in the name of President Karolyi.

An hour after their arrival the members of the commission were received by President Karolyi, who expressed the hope their visit would be fruitful and have good results in Hungary. The Americans were invited to the President's mansion, where they met the prominent Hungarian statesmen, scientists, writers, and men of affairs.

The papers of Budapest published articles recalling the former ties of friendship between Hungary and the United States, especially the sympathy shown Louis Kossuth, and more recently Count Albert Apponyi, and pointing out the significance of the large Hungarian population in the United States.

MALTBIE TO MAKE REPORT.

Has Investigated Transit Problems for 34th Street Board of Trade.

The Thirty-fourth Street Board of Trade announced yesterday that a report upon the transit problems affecting the midtown district, which contains many of the large department stores, would be made public soon by Milo R. Maltbie, ex-Public Service Commissioner, who was retained by the board to make a special investigation.

"There is nothing more important to the members of the Thirty-fourth Street Board of Trade and the business men in this district than the consideration of transportation problems and the starting of a movement necessary to obtain needed improvements," said the announcement. "We have been trying to obtain constructive criticism. Mere complaints, without proper suggestion with a remedy, will avail us nothing. The radical change that has taken place in subway transportation from the "Z" system to the "H" system naturally has caused a great deal of adverse comment; but it must not be overlooked that several Public Service Commissioners, after great deliberation, determined that the principle of direct north and south bound rapid transit serves all New York best."

150 Women Law Students at N.Y.U.

The enfranchisement of women in New York is believed to be responsible for the large enrollment of women law students of the New York University. About 150 women are now studying at Washington Square for the degree of bachelor of laws. Never before have the facilities of the university's law school been taxed as at present, Dean Sommer said. Three courses are being given—the night intensive course; the regular course which was started last September, and the new classes beginning Jan. 2.

TRY TO SOW DISCORD IN ALLIED ARMIES

Ahrens in Same Building.

Dr. Ahrens today has an office in Wilhelmstrasse in the same building as Dr. Rentzau. He is still engaged in propaganda, and his field is still the American mind. He has charge of propaganda among the American soldiers in occupied Germany.

There is another official who has charge of propaganda among the French soldiers in occupied Germany.

One naturally asks how this propaganda works, and that brings us back to the little differences between the doughboy and poilu, which of themselves have amounted to nothing, but which, fanned by the Germans, are today of different proportions.

America has been told how well the Germans received the American Army of Occupation and how well they have behaved. When one goes back to two weeks before the Americans entered Germany, one finds that their local newspapers showed that expressions were general that it would be very unfortunate if the Americans occupied Coblenz or Treves.

As soon as the armistice terms were announced, there were on all sides expressions of hope that either the French or British would come here, but "deliver us from the Americans." Had not the propagandists told the German people that the Americans were barbarians, that they killed all their prisoners and showed no quarter on battlefields, and were altogether swine and a tough lot?

But the German mind has always been open to the propagandists. Along came the retiring German Army. The officers preached night and day to the Germans to be pleasant to the Americans. They must tell the Americans that America won the war. They must tell the Americans that Wilson was the greatest man in the world. They must "play up to" the Americans.

People Do as They Are Told.

And as it was theirs not to reason why, the German people hereabouts did as they were told. The idea of the Government propagandists was that America's influence at the Peace Conference would pull them out of the hole into which they had got.

So from the day of the Americans' arrival in Germany the Germans have been subserviently kind to them. Now, human nature is human nature the world over. The Americans found the Germans well behaved and acquiescent, and they adopted a policy of moderation and were easy with the Germans.

Often the doughboy, without bearing in mind the things the German had done, and the German, without regard to governmental wishes, got to talking together, and each decided not prevent doughboys in many instances from seeming forgetful that they were at war with the Germans.

The American soldiers here are for the most part those who did the most fighting. This means they had been for several months in the mud of devastated France. Then they reached the Rhineland, got good beds to sleep in, had a rather easy time, and decided that Germany was not such a bad place after all. This means, in short, that some slight feeling of camaraderies has grown up here and there between American soldiers and German civilians.

Girls and Children.

One evening I overheard a doughboy talking to a German girl. He knew German and was saying: "You know we came into the war to whip the Kaiser. Now the Kaiser is gone and the war is over. Let's be friends, you and I." Nothing unpatriotic was intended by that man.

Doughboys who are found seated on the banks of the Rhine with a German child on each knee plan nothing against their country.

Yet it is just this humane character of the American doughboys that has been seized upon by the German propagandists to further their own ends.

It should be borne in mind that the district is overrun with officials. They are in most cases imported from Prussia. The revolution has brought no change in officials of the Rhineland, who are the same as in the Kaiser's régime. It should be borne in mind also that this is a Catholic region, and the priests all play politics, their party being the controlling political force hereabout. It should be borne in mind again that this is a conservative region where the most influential people love democracy at heart as much as they love smallpox.

Hence it is a field for Dr. Ahrens. His work has been done subtly and well. In common with many other Americans here, I had almost begun to believe in the German sincerity in the profession of high regard for America and Americans until I was made acquainted with the fact that instructions to coddle the Americans were coming from Berlin despite the efforts of the American military authorities to prevent it.

Under the instructions the Germans who came in touch with Americans were ordered to emphasize what kindly persons they were—so different from the French, who were cruel and savage conquerors. If I have been told once I have been told a hundred times how Germans hope that the Americans will stay in Coblenz until all the allied soldiers withdrew, for the coming of the French would be a calamity. One finds that some little incident that could be construed unfavorably to French conduct is magnified and spread to all quarters of the area occupied by Americans.

There is an old hotel proprietor in whose establishment American officers are quartered and past whose place the correspondents must go to reach the headquarters of the Third Army. He delights to halt one and tell the new story of the day about how mean the French are and how good the Americans are. He will do this when he knows we know he is working for Germany every day in the week.

Germans here, who would give their right hand to have Wilhelm back on that the other was not such a bad fellow after all. Some doughboy would catch the smile of a pretty German girl, and forgave his enemy that evening after supper.

A strict army order against fraternization went into effect, but that did the throne, will tell you how Germany must have a governmental organization just like that of the United States, the best in the world.

But it is among the doughboys that propagandists do most work, and every German is a potential propagandist. They talk to the doughboys about their cousins in America, and how they are going across the ocean after peace is made. They end up by some new story about the French. Sometimes that doughboy has his petty grievances against a Frenchman and thus the grievance grows.

Bearing in mind some of these stories about how unpleasant the French were to the German civilians, I made a trip with a French officer into French-occupied Germany and saw for myself what falsehoods had been told. Frenchmen treat Germans firmly, but in no case cruelly. I saw Frenchmen talking to German girls as doughboys are not allowed to do. I heard from a French General how stories of bad conduct had been investigated and proved groundless.

There came to the advanced American headquarters one day a story from a German source of how a regiment of Frenchmen, passing through the end of the American area, had pillaged the village and made all the civilians line up and salute them. I went on a trip of investigation with an American officer and found that one French orderly had taken a chicken and paid 5 marks instead of the 10 marks demanded, and how one French Lieutenant, seeing a German at work in the field with a pitchfork, had made him present arms with his tool of labor. These facts are part of the American Army records.

Secret Service Kept Busy.

This work goes on unceasingly. The American Secret Service is day after day running down evil stories about the French which turn out to amount to nothing. It has reached such a stage that yesterday two ardent "American Germans" were told that the next good thing they said to an American soldier about America would get them into jail.

The German propaganda among the Americans against the French is just like their campaign in America against the English, only a little less open, but with a hundred times the number of agents.

Some official or priest will hear something against the French or under orders make up something out of whole cloth and will pass it along—and it goes a long way.

Many American soldiers are billeted in private homes and it is impossible to prevent them from talking to members of those families. That is the way that much propaganda is done. In some instances the agent does not know that he or she is doing propaganda, but in most cases he knows what the main idea is.

The trouble about the whole proposition is that the Germans seem to be succeeding in it, as shown by letters the soldiers write to their home folks. With the lifting of the censorship the letters of only a few are examined, but these yield proof that some of the doughboys, too many of them, are getting to feel too kindly toward Germany and too harshly toward the French. When one considers what the father or sister in the United States thinks of what the soldier writes them, the result is not pleasant.

The American doughboy who goes back home anti-French will be a problem, and it is to be feared that the number will not be small.

German propaganda is two sided. Germans in the territory occupied by the French preach night and day how the Americans are fraternizing with the Germans and becoming their friends. They tell the Frenchmen that American doughboys love Germany more than they do France, and how Americans go to church with them. They repeat that Americans take dinner at their homes, and they love to repeat the story that American soldiers are becoming engaged to marry their daughters.

False Stories Believed.

These things are all false, but the poilu sometimes believes them, and when a poilu has some little grievance or rivalry his grievance forthwith expands.

An American newly landed in Europe reached Coblenz from Paris the other day. "Why is it," he asked, "that the Americans are fraternizing so shamefully with the Germans? It is the talk of Paris."

This is but a reflection of German propaganda work among the French soldiers. The Germans tell the French that America is going to save Germany from the French at the Peace Conference. One story is that President Wilson will not approve of France getting back Alsace-Lorrains. To use slang, that gets the Frenchman's goat. Tell that to a high French official, and it makes no difference. Tell it to the poilu and it does harm to America.

It is hard to convince the doughboy that he is a victim of German propaganda. He asks you scornfully what that little child who smiles at him and takes him by the hand knows about propaganda. I felt that way until my eyes were opened. Americans at home must not blame the doughboy too quickly. I know an American who before we entered the war was watched by the Secret Service because he acted and talked pro-German, and he was the Chairman of a Liberty Loan committee the last time I saw his name in print.

All know how far German propaganda went in America. It was easier to grasp it and choke it there than it is here.

It is hard to put the doughboy on his guard when the German pats him on the back and tells him he is a fine fellow. It is difficult to keep the poilu from believing that the American doughboy is not really going to marry a German girl and in the next war refuse to help France against Germany. When that poilu has perhaps lost two brothers, he sometimes does not stop to think before he says something harsh about Americans and tells other poilus who may sympathize with him.

Doesn't Help the Allies.

Many Americans believe that the last great war has been fought, but the French soldier does not think that nor does the German. Marshal Foch the other day spoke of preparing against another war.

So, when a German tells a Frenchman that a German cousin up in the American area says the doughboys swear that never again will they help France, it does not help the Allies. And then that German cousin tells the Americans that America really won the war, but the French say that France could have won anyhow without America. That does not help the Allies.

At a time when the friends of civilization should be standing side by side for the sake of the future one finds the soldiers of two great and friendly nations allowing themselves to believe mean stories about each other and getting wrought up over nothing. If they had the judicial temperament it would be different, but they haven't it.

It is the old story of crowd psychology. And it is also a problem for the wise heads of America and France.

If the Americans at home want to help, they will discount the stories against France which are being distributed by some well-intentioned but not always well-informed or well-counseled recent visitors to Europe.

It is well to remember that French and Americans are two different races and do not always look at the same thing in the same light or speak the same thoughts. America would not have had her glorious opportunity to turn the tide against Germany if it had not been for France. A nation that did what France did in the war is not the nation to get annoyed at too quickly.

To any American mother or father who has a letter from a doughboy son "panning" France, take it easy, take it easy.

'DRY' AMENDMENT ASSAILED BY BECK

HE WARNS OF BOLSHEVISM

Also Says Anti-British Propaganda Is Busy Here, at Dinner In His Honor.

The Prohibition Amendment as essentially a blow at the Union, and its passage will result in more class dissension in the next two years than any one has thought, declared James M. Beck last night to 250 members and guests of the American Defense League and American Rights Union, who gathered in the Astor Gallery of the Waldorf-Astoria to pay tribute to Mr. Beck as a prophet of preparedness and as one who had contributed largely to the awakening of America to her duty in the war.

Mr. Beck's attack on the amendment, which, he said, he made without any discussion of the merits of prohibition itself, was greeted with great applause.

After defining the amendment in effect as an attempt to regulate the personal habits of individuals and thus an infringement of the Constitution's base principles, namely the right of home rule, the speaker declared that its ratification constituted one of the deadliest assaults ever made on the Constitution of the United States. After the approbation which was given this had somewhat subsided, he leaned forward earnestly and said:

If I had a message to deliver tonight I would make it this: "America, wake up and defend the institutions of your country as defined and expressed in the Constitution of the United States."

"These are grave times, and who can tell what the next five years may produce? We must not hold to the abstractions of visionaries, but must hold to the things which came to us from our fathers. Have you appreciated how far Bolshevism can go in two years in this country? Suppose we have here long bread lines, suppose we have men coming home to whom death and struggle have been commonplaces for some time, suppose the light of anarchy flares forth here. I tell you we would be in far worse plight than was Great Britain in the days of the Albert Hall affair. We could bring words being in reference to the refusal of facilities to tie up London's water and lights should the authorities refuse use of the hall, an incident which provoked a serious crisis in British life.

Tells Heroism of Britons.

Following his introduction by Job E. Hedges, who was toastmaster, Mr. Beck expressed his thanks for "this generous expression of the good will of so many good friends," and then turned to discussion of his recent trip through Great Britain. He spoke in unmeasured terms of the heroism of the British peoples through four years of tremendous hardship and told two incidents of raids on London which, he said, never had been recorded in this country.

One night hundreds of well-dressed men and women were passing through the Piccadilly Circus. Suddenly, without warning, a bomb fell in the Circus and 200 women and men were picked up injured. Again, a number of men and women took refuge in a cellar. A high explosive bomb came through the house and exploded in the cellar. It burst a main connecting a sewer. Those who were not killed by the shell were drowned by the flood of water. And, gentlemen, through all this terrible experience and others like it, the people of Britain went calmly through, unflinchingly to victory."

After declaring that there was a great anti-British propaganda at work in this country, Mr. Beck brought his auditors to their feet by declaring that never in his trips abroad since America entered the war had he heard Britons give utterance to anything but praise.

Turning to the problems before the Peace Conference, Mr. Beck declared his belief that the first thing to be done was the restoration of order in the world and the establishment of visionary theories just now should be subordinated. Commenting on Bolshevism, he declared Russia and Germany to be dens of crime, most dangerous to mankind, and endangering all other nations, and said that the paramount duty of the conferees at Versailles was in the establishment of stable Governments for these two countries, as he felt that Bolshevism was destined to affect the whole world if order did not obtain in Russia and Germany.

Peace Should Come First.

"Yesterday I made a purely extemporaneous speech to the lawyers in New York," said Mr. Beck, "to which the New York press this morning gave an amount of space which amazed me. Possibly the main point of that address has been somewhat misapprehended. I did not mean to deprecate any effort under normal conditions to form a League of Nations. Visionary as the scheme at present seems, in view of the disillusionments of the last four years, we must not assume that man is in a blind alley of negation, and that no outlet is possible.

"I did and do mean to assert that this and similar questions should be subordinated to the very concrete and practical problem of restoring peace to a world which is now more disorganized than at any time since the Thirty Years' War, and that general schemes for the common government of the world will be this subordinated and postponed but for the unwise insistence of certain statesmen's representatives.

"I gave two reasons for my conclusion, one being that the immediate financial and social problems of each belligerent nation was the first necessity. If a man had undergone a serious operation we would not, just as he emerged from the stupor of anaesthesia, lay before him a complicated business problem. The world has just gone through the most terrible operation of its history. It is still prostrate. Why therefore do it now with plans for a superman? Again, I urged that the people of the European nations were in no condition now to consider these questions calmly and deliberately. They should have a period of recuperation.

"I could and should have given a still broader and more persuasive reason for my conclusion. Last Summer I witnessed an eclipse. Slowly the shadow of the moon entered the disk of the sun, until it nearly obscured it, and then slowly it receded until the sun again shone with its full power. An eclipse is now stealing over the world. It is Bolshevism, menacing class war. The obscuration began in Petrograd. It has now reached Vienna and Berlin.

"Unless normal conditions are restored, where will it stop? It could not create a worse time, for the burdens of the people were never heavier, and four years have put fire into the blood of men. Piracy, lawlessness, evil passions, murderous thought, have been the commonplace for the last four years, and if famine is not stayed and conditions ameliorated, they will grow worse.

Like Nero's Folly.

"For us to talk of peace leagues at this time is to be guilty of Nero's folly in fiddling while Rome was burning. We should rather hasten to restore peace, resume normal commercial relations, lessen the intolerable burdens of taxation, and speed up production.

"We should enter into a great campaign of education to teach the manual toiler that we are all in the same boat, that he suffers worst from class antagonism, and that this material happiness depends not upon the artificial restoration of production, but its increase. We must teach him this elementary fact in political economy that his happiness depends not so much upon the amount of his wages as their purchasing power and that the latter is measured by the quantity produced.

"We must so govern that there is no privileged class in the nation and that all, capitalist and manual toiler alike, are but the different parts of an orchestra and that only by playing together as good musicians can the symphony of progress be played. We must revive faith in the institutions of our country, under which we have grown great, and especially in the supreme compact, the Constitution of the United States. It, as all political institutions, depends upon public opinion.

"It has already been partly destroyed, because public opinion failed to defend it. Its main pillars are still intact. Let them perish, and our form of government will be as the Parthenon, a beautiful ruin, admired by all the ages, but still a ruin. In the last ten years that noble edifice has been slowly undermined. Only a few days ago its basic principle of home rule in all matters not of purely Federal concern sustained a deadly assault.

"The best hope of true democracy is in the perpetuity of the form of government which our fathers gave us. Let that be destroyed, and the fairest heritage of man will be gone. Men of all parties in these trying and terrible days should unite to defend the sacred heritage of our fathers, which wisely kept the power of government within its true orbit by constitutional limitations."

Speakers Praise His Work.

The first speaker at the dinner was De Lancey Nicoll, who praised Mr. Beck for his work in arousing the war spirit both through his writings and his speeches. He pointed out that Mr. Beck had practically surrendered his entire law practice in order to accomplish this. Following him came John R. Rathom, editor of The Providence Journal, who attributed to Mr. Beck many of the attributes "of that great American whose passing away we have been mourning for the past few days. He has said that Mr. Beck had displayed the greatest courage in his fight on the hyphen 'despite the attacks of little men with great power."

Sir Charles Davison of Montreal referred to Mr. Beck as "one who had not waited until America was united in decision to enter the war," but had worked tirelessly to persuade the people to the right point of view. Mr. Hedges's introductory speech contained a statement that "henceforth there can be no alleged Americanism—a man will be for America or against her. Traitors will be taken out and shot."

2 KILLED, 3 INJURED, IN FIRE

104th Street Building Collapses, Burying Firemen Under Debris.

A three-alarm fire at the Delivery Auto Truck Company, 425-431 East 104th Street, yesterday morning resulted in the death of two firemen and the serious injury of three others. Many other firemen had narrow escapes from being trapped and losing their lives when the walls caved in.

The men killed were George Scanlon of Engine Company 44 and Joseph Schmidt, a probationary fireman from the same company, who had been attached to the department only ten days. The injured, who were taken to Reception Hospital, are Lieutenant Alfred Singleton of Truck 23, John Sheldon of Truck 44, and Joseph Callahan of the fireboat George B. McClellan.

The men who were killed were on the roof of the shed just behind the burning two-story building. They had no more than climbed up when the rear wall of the burning structure collapsed and buried them in an avalanche of hot bricks. Every effort was made to save the men; streams of water were played on the burning debris and the firemen tried to jack up the beams which pinned their comrades down, and after great effort they succeeded in extricating Shelton. For more than an hour the rescue party worked to free the other two men. Callahan was trying to dig the men out when he slipped and fell to the ground, and Lieutenant Singleton was struck by a beam.

URGES CIVIC TRAINING.

Dr. Adler Would Teach Language as Aid to Americanization.

Four prime factors in eoving the problem of Americanization, Dr. Felix Adler told the Society for Ethical Culture yesterday, were the teaching of the English language, teaching and learning respect for the laws, applying the learning by doing and, lastly, loving America and its ideals.

Discussing the first factor, Dr. Adler called attention to illiteracy among the most indigenous of America's population. He suggested the public schools might do much by emphasizing the importance of the native tongue. Much could be accomplished in the matter of obedience to law, he said, if the people could learn that this country was governed equally for the most part by the rule of the majority.

Dr. Adler called attention to examples of lawlessness sometimes set by Americans themselves in labor troubles, and turned to advice on citizenship, suggesting that the individual train himself gradually, first measuring up to his neighborhood duties and progressing to an understanding of national problems.

BULKLEY'S WORK IN ITALY.

New York's Red Cross Man Fed Thousands of Starving People.

Henry W. Bulkley, a member of the firm of Cameron & Bulkley, 13 East Thirtieth Street, said yesterday that he had learned through the American Red Cross that it was his brother Seymour Bulkley, and not a Seymour Ralkley, who was the subject of a special cable dispatch to THE TIMES last week, praising him for his work in relieving the inhabitants of villages destroyed by the Austrian bombardments.

Mr. Bulkley said yesterday that his brother had been a resident of Italy for several years.

Mr. Bulkley got a letter from his brother several days ago which told of the suffering and hardships of the population. The letter was mailed at Conegliano.

"I have taught these people to stand in line and keep silent," the Red Cross officer wrote, "which, considering they are Italians, is a remarkable achievement. I have eight assistants, four soldiers and a soldier chauffeur. In this one place I have served 6,500 persons with beans, peas, bacon, &c. We have with beans, peas, bacon, &c. We have been most necessary in saving the people from starving. I have in outlying communes fourteen points of distribution, each place with a varying population of from 3,000 to 7,000 persons."

SHOOK RING FROM WINDOW.

"Finder's" Champagne Gloves Mrs. Kohlberg's Only Clue.

The only clue that Mrs. William Kohlberg of 590 West 174th Street has of a stylishly dressed man who "found" her ring yesterday afternoon is his champagne colored gloves.

While she was shaking her lace bureau cover out of the window of her third-floor apartment she was talking with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Charles Kohlberg, and therefore did not notice that with the dust she was also shaking out a diamond ring, which she received from her husband on their fifth wedding anniversary.

Then she looked out of the window and saw a well-dressed man, wearing champagne colored gloves stoop to pick up something. He pocketed the ring, looked up and smiled a "thank you." Instead of returning the smile Mrs. Kohlberg yelled, attracting the attention of a woman who was passing with a baby carriage. The man ran, and the woman followed, but burdened with the carriage she was unable to catch him.

An advertisement in the Lost and Found column of this issue contains an appeal for the return of the ring.

Two Boy Skaters Drowned.

Two unidentified boys about 13 years old were drowned yesterday afternoon in the Bronx River about a half mile north of 180th Street and Boston Road when they eluded a police guard and skated on thin ice. Herman W. Merkle, Chief Forester of Bronx Park, recovered one of the bodies. Though firemen searched two hours for the other body, it was not recovered.

SAY ROOSEVELT FAVORED DRY CAUSE

PROMISED AID IN FIGHT

Correspondence and Substance of Interview Made Public by Anti-Saloon League.

Andrew B. Wood, Assistant Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, issued a statement yesterday in which he charged that an impression had been given shortly before Colonel Roosevelt's death that he was in sympathy "with the brewery side of the question." Mr. Wood submitted evidence which he said proved that Colonel Roosevelt supported the prohibition cause. His statement follows:

"Having had an interview in July, 1918, with Colonel Roosevelt at his home in the presence of the Rev. Henry C. Scotford upon the subject of national prohibition, and noting that the brewers' attorney, shortly before the Colonel died, had circulated a statement which was so worded as to leave the impression that Mr. Roosevelt's sympathy lay with the brewery side of the question, and, realizing how unfortunate and, as I believe, utterly out of harmony with the fact would be the continuance of such an impression, I took the opportunity of making a little further inquiry on the subject.

"I submitted the matter to an intimate friend of Colonel Roosevelt, the Rev. Ferdinand C. Iglehart, D. D., contributing editor of The Christian Herald, a man whom Colonel Roosevelt had told me and others that he held in very high personal regard and loved as an intimate friend. On the day the thirty-sixth State ratified the national prohibition amendment I received the following communication:

Favored the Amendment.

Jan. 16, 1919.

Rev. A. B. Wood,
906 Broadway, New York City.

My dear Mr. Wood: I was pleased to hear of your favorable interview with Colonel Roosevelt upon the subject of national prohibition, and was not surprised that you felt encouraged by his attitude. He has expressed himself to me on so many occasions that it would be a great personal grief to learn that the brewery counsel could succeed in leaving the impression on the public mind that Colonel Roosevelt's sympathy was with them.

The inclosed letter was sent to me just after Congress voted to submit the National Prohibition Amendment to the Legislatures of the States. Not only before that time but since that time in conversation specifically on the meaning of his letter, the Colonel expressed himself as favoring the amendment. He said that in addition to specific deeds in opposition to the liquor traffic, the whole trend of his life had been toward prohibition.

I am glad to submit this to you as corroborating what you stated about your interview. Cordially yours,

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART.

"The inclosure is submitted below and requires but a simple explanation to set it in proper light. Congress took final action in submitting the national amendment on Dec. 18, 1917. The letter from Colonel Roosevelt is dated the following day and, as explained in Dr. Iglehart's letter to me, it was intended to signify Mr. Roosevelt's favorable attitude toward national prohibition.

Colonel Roosevelt's Letter.

432 Fourth Avenue, New York,
Office of Theodore Roosevelt.
Dec. 19, 1917.

My Dear Mr. Iglehart—I thank you for your book and appreciate your sending it to me and I wish to congratulate you on what has happened in Congress and the success that is crowning your long fight against alcoholism.

The American saloon has been one of the most mischievous elements in American social, political and industrial life. No man has warred more valiantly against it than you have, and I am glad that it has been my privilege to stand with you in the contest. Faithfully yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Dr. Ferdinand C. Iglehart, care of Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

"In the interview which I had after I had explained the progress the prohibition movement had made in New York State, the Colonel said: 'That is fine progress,' and when I spoke of the national situation specifically he told me he would do what he could to secure national prohibition.

"Inasmuch as some correspondence passed between us after that, being matters which he said he took up with Mr. Hays, I feel that I am entirely right in saying that the Colonel did what he felt he could to secure national prohibition and stood ready to do more at the right minute, if necessary.

"The latter statement is further corroborated by two of my associates who interviewed the Colonel but a short time before his death."

The Anti-Saloon League announced that it would have several representatives at the legislative hearing on prohibition in Albany tomorrow, though it had opposed such a hearing "as a sheer waste of time." Wayne B. Wheeler, national counsel for the league, and Mrs. Ella A. Boole, State Superintendent of the W. C. T. U., will be among the speakers.

FRIGHT KILLS SKIPPER.

Martin, Who Let Zeppelin Crew Drown, Thought He Had Been Poisoned.

LONDON, Dec. 25, (Associated Press.)—Captain William Martin of the British trawler King Stephen, who from fear of treachery refused to take off the crew of the disabled Zeppelin L-19 in the North Sea in February, 1916, died eleven months later of a nervous collapse caused by the mistaken belief that he had been poisoned. This and other facts concerning the incident now are available for the first time and it is possible to tell the story in detail. It is believed here that the eighteen Germans composing the crew of the L-19 perished.

The action of Captain Martin evoked denunciations of alleged "British inhumanity" in the German press, which compared the affair to the celebrated Baralong case. It is claimed here that public opinion upheld Captain Martin in his position that if he had taken the Germans on board the trawler they would have captured the vessel and his unarmed crew of ten men. It will be recalled that the Rev. Arthur W. Ingrem, Bishop of London, publicly declared, "we ought to stand by a skipper. The Germans have killed chivalry in wartime."

Because of his action Captain Martin, it is learned, received a number of letters threatening his life. About eleven months after the North Sea incident he became ill after smoking a cigarette from a package sent him by mail, and he was convinced that the cigarette contained poison. Analysis of the tobacco proved that his fears were unfounded, but he never recovered from the shock. The verdict of his physician was that he had died from sheer fright.

SUICIDE NOTIFIED MORGUE.

Answering Ryan's Telephone Call, Newark Police Found Him Dying.

"I have just shot myself. I'll be dead when your wagon gets here," was the startling message received over the telephone by an attendant at Mullen's Morgue in Newark last night. The man on the phone directed the wagon to go to the "South Street yards" of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The police were notified and Mullen started with his wagon.

They found Henry Ryan, 59 years of age, of 122 Orchard Street, unconscious with two bullet wounds in his body. He was formerly attached to the Newark Police Force, but for the past three or four years was connected with the detective force of the railroad. He died before he reached the City Hospital. Before calling the morgue Ryan sent a message to Chief Coakley, of the Pennsylvania force, that he had been shot by some one riding on a train. His relatives could ascribe no reason for his act.

RAILROAD DEFICIT POINTS TO NEW RISE

The Wage Board is understood to have recommended to Director General Hines an increase for the brotherhoods as large as that which they obtained under the Adamson law. Unofficial estimates indicate that if this recommendation is adopted the increase would amount to $100,000,000, and this would make the total wage advances under Government operation mount up to $1,000,000,000, or about 65 per cent.

Little Hope of Surplus.

All elements of the situation considered, the new Director General is confronted by a situation where he can foresee no hope of having the nationalized railroads earn a surplus this year, despite the fact that only as short a time ago as Jan. 3 Mr. McAdoo, appearing before the Senate committee in advocacy of extension of the period of Government control of five years, estimated that with the same volume of traffic as last year the Government would earn a surplus in 1919 above the guaranteed rental of $100,000,000.

The statement was also made by Mr. McAdoo to the committee that "it would be possible during the year 1919, or certainly at the end of the year, to effect a considerable reduction in rates unless the traffic for 1919 should be much less than it was in the year 1918."

In the conferences which Director General Hines held with his staff of Regional Directors last week five ways for meeting the threatened 1919 deficit were considered. These were, first, to increase freight rates again; second, to seek an appropriation by Congress of a fund to meet the deficit; third, operating economies; fourth, increase in volume of traffic, and finally, reduction of wages.

It is understood that the fifth of these possible antidotes, that of reducing wages, was at once stricken from the list, on the ground that it would not be possible to undertake any general reduction until there was a considerable decline in the cost of living, something not now in prospect. It is not likely that the situation can be met through increased volume of traffic, especially since the weekly returns to the Director General show that there has been a marked decline since the signing of the armistice in November.

On account of the stoppage of war industry and the readjustment of business during the period of reconstruction the Regional Directors are contemplating contraction rather than expansion of the volume of tonnage. As compared with October there was a 12 per cent. decline in tonnage in November, and December figures are expected to show a further decline.

Problem of Meeting a Deficit.

Thus five possible ways of meeting the threatened deficit seemed to be reduced to three, increased freight rates, an appropriation from Congress, or operating economies. When Mr. McAdoo was before the Senate committee he voiced the belief that considerable savings should be made this year from various economies. He spoke of savings of $85,000,000 in five of the regional districts, which he thought amount to $120,000,000 for the entire country.

It has since been pointed out to Mr. Hines that $80,000,000 of this sum came through cutting out passenger trains, as a war measure to which the public was willing to submit for patriotic reasons, but that the public could not be counted upon to continue to submit to this after the passing of the emergency. Of the remaining prospective saving of $40,000,000, $7,000,000 was through limitation of newspaper and magazine advertising, and most of the rest represented reduction of traffic service offices.

There have been economies resulting from short-routing of traffic, but it has been found in the two sections where the greater part of it was done that the total saving in car miles amounted to one-fifth of 1 per cent., or a saving of only two miles in every thousand.

If the reduction of wages is out of the question, and increased volume of traffic is impossible, and savings from operating economies are too small to serve as a vital factor against mounting expenses that are running into the hundreds of millions, the present administration is confronted by the alternatives of asking Congress to make up any operating deficit by appropriation of large sums, or of increasing freight rates.

Policy of Increasing Rates.

The policy which Mr. McAdoo observed as Director General was to keep the railroads self-supporting by increases in freight or passenger rates to the extent necessary to meet the increases in the wage scale. From all that can be learned it is the belief of Director General Hines also that this is the only sound policy, the argument being that the burden of increased labor cost should be shared by the users of the railroads in proportion to the amount of traffic they consume, and that this burden should not be placed upon the general public, including nonusers or infrequent users of the roads, through national taxation.

It is not understood that officials of the Railroad Administration feel that the Government has a right to place on the roads a permanent burden of more than $1,000,000,000 a year without providing the revenues with which to meet this increased cost of operation. Otherwise, when the Government releases its grip on the railroads, it will be turning back to the private companies owning them properties facing bankruptcy through cumulative deficits, instead of roads that were solvent when taken over by the Government and rented from their owners.

WOULD TRY KAISER FOR ACTS IN WAR

Gerard Tells Meeting That to Send Ruler to St. Helena Would Dignify Him.

SEES A HUMBLED PEOPLE

Declares Germany Should Be Barred from League of Nations Until Fully Repentant.

James W. Gerard, former Ambassador to Germany, appeared yesterday at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and told a large audience that as he had delivered a lecture there last year he thought it would be more interesting to them if they would ask questions concerning Germany, and he would answer them rather than present a prepared speech.

One of the first questions asked of Mr. Gerard was whether he believed that Germany should be punished for invading Belgium, and if so, what form the punishment should take. He replied:

"In my opinion Germany should be made pay every cent of damage she caused. There was no pretense of right whatsoever in the invasion of Belgium. On the 10th of August, 1914, I asked the Kaiser why Belgium was invaded, and he answered 'For strategical reasons.' As a matter of fact, it was a well thought out scheme by the Kaiser and his military advisers to invade Northern France by way of Belgium."

"What indemnity should Germany be made to pay?" Mr. Gerard was asked.

"I do not think she will be able to pay as large an indemnity as the published reports say the Allied powers will ask her to pay," he replied. "Germany depends for most of her revenue on foreign trade and that is gone and it will take years to bring it back again."

In reply to a question as to whether he thought that Germany should be admitted to a league of nations, Mr. Gerard said that she should be admitted only after years of repentance for the misery and cruelty she has inflicted on the world. Mr. Gerard was then asked if he thought there was any fighting spirit left in the German people.

"I do not think so," he answered. "You can imagine how humiliated and dispirited the German people must feel after believing their soldiers were supermen and to wake up and find out they were less. I can assure you that the German people are thoroughly sick of war."

Mr. Gerard said that he believed the Kaiser was personally responsible for the war, and that he should be placed on trial for his acts. He asserted that the Kaiser was responsible for the deportation of men and women from Belgium, the sinking of the Lusitania and the cruelties practised at prison camps. He declared that to send the Kaiser to St. Helena would be to dignify him too much, and that to kill him would be to make a martyr of him.

"Do you think the German people are good people, but have been led astray by their military leaders?" Mr. Gerard was asked.

"The German people have been governed by the Hohenzollerns for many years," he replied. "When Belgium was invaded, when women and young girls were deported, when the Lusitania was sunk, there was no voice raised in protest in Germany except that of Karl Liebknecht and Maximilian Harden. The Kaiser has always believed that he was divinely appointed by God to rule the world, and this belief has been ingrained in the German people."

Mr. Gerard in reply to a question said that he did not believe that the German people would take the Kaiser back, because that even before the war the Social Democrats were in the majority in Germany but they had no voice in the Reichstag. Mr. Gerard said that there still remained in Germany the members of the landed aristocracy who believe in the Hohenzollerns.

VIENNA, Jan. 17, (Via Genoa, Jan. 18.)—According to special information from Trieste, the strained relations between the Jugoslavs and Italians are assuming a critical stage. A settlement of their differences is improbable and an outbreak of hostilities is considered imminent.

The situation is further aggravated by the attitude of the French authorities in Trieste and Pola, who express aversion to the Italian plans in the Adriatic. Italian outgoing ships in Trieste and Pola are searched by the Entente authorities in order to prevent the Italians taking coal and materials from the magazines of the former Austrian Government.

MANY GIFTS FOR WILSONS.

Still Pouring In from All Over Europe—Children's Most Valued.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—President and Mrs. Wilson came to Paris with a very modest collection of trunks and personal baggage, but they will probably be forced to take home a carload. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have received so many gifts in the course of their stay in Paris and their visits to England and Italy that a large quantity of them will probably have to be taken to Washington on an army transport.

Gifts of all kinds and of all values began pouring in the day President Wilson arrived, and they still are coming in in a never-ending stream. They come from all classes of people.

Many of the presents are priceless, but the President values most those having a sentimental appeal. These have come principally from children, not only in France, but from all over Europe, and also from families in Entente countries which have suffered from the war.

President Wilson has directed that each one be formally acknowledged. Sometimes in response to a particularly touching message accompanying the gifts he writes a personal acknowledgment, but the pressure on his time is so great that he cannot do so for all. Nevertheless, every gift, no matter how insignificant, is carefully preserved. Many of them will undoubtedly find permanent places in the White House, because the President does not feel that were given to him wholly personally.

are shown in many new and eminently smart models, especially designed to meet the requirements of early Spring.

Very alluring are the severely classic lines dominating most of these frocks of tricotine and serge, and the simple elegance of the decorative features introduced with such admirable restraint.

Embroidery, wrought directly on the material, figures in many of the most impressive models; but there are others whose attractiveness lies chiefly in the originality of cut, the clever arrangement of a sash, or some individual novelty of detail which adds distinction without showiness. All are representative of the refinement of taste, and among them are many that may appropriately be worn by women of more mature years who have retained the slender grace of their youth.

Why First Mortgages Guaranteed by this Company Are the Best Investment for Prudent People.

So shrewd an accumulator as the late Hetty Green used to say, that there was nothing equal to the steady earning of interest, that the way to get ahead was to make sure that your principal was safe and accumulate the interest.

The trouble with speculation is that, while you make profits at times that are very pleasing, you make losses at other times, and in the long run you are generally worse off than if you had made neither but had kept your principal undisturbed and received regular interest payments on it.

It is strange what a fascination there is in trying to buy cheap and sell dear and how tame it seems to many people not to see their principal going up or down, but only producing interest.

No investor has ever lost a dollar.

PLEA FOR ECONOMIC AID TO THE RUSSIANS

OPPONENT OF BOLSHEVISM

Author Declares Leaders Did Not Lead, But Approved Processes They Could Not Stay.

Moissaye J. Olgin, author of a number of books on Russia, speaking last night at Cooper Union on "The Russian Crisis," urged that the Allies refrain from leaving Russia to her own fate by inaugurating an economic boycott. The world, he said, would not gain by an attempt to starve out a nation of 120,000,000 people.

Although an opponent of the Bolsheviki, calling himself a Menshevik, Mr. Olgin suggested that the best way to rehabilitate Russia would be to renew commercial intercourse with it. Russia, he said, had plenty of iron, coal, oil, gold, skins and other materials which America might use while Russia might get from America agricultural implements, machinery and other products. "We will pay you well," he added. "You need our materials and we need yours. We need your skill and your technical ability. The establishment of commercial relations will solve the problem."

Mr. Olgin said that on coming to power the Bolsheviats adopted a clever policy. They saw processes going on, and knowing that they could not stop them they approved of them. "They saw the workmen taking over the industries," he added, "and so they told them that was the thing to do. They saw that the soldiers had stopped fighting, and so they said that the war should cease. They saw the peasants taking the land, and they said, 'Let the peasants take the land.' They saw various parts of Russia breaking away from Russia because of old grievances, and so they said let all the nationalities of Russia have self-determination.

"Incidentally it may be well to note that the Bolsheviki seem to have changed their minds with respect to this principle, for why then are they sending armies to the Ukraine, to Kief, Vilna, and Warsaw? They do not agree to self-determination any more. But they had to agree to it when they came into power, for it was going on. The Bolsheviki just happened to say the things that the masses of the Russian people wanted to be told in the Summer of 1917. The charge that the Bolsheviki are German agents is so much nonsense that any Russian who knows anything at all will not even discuss it.

May Be Reaction in Russia.

"I do not believe that the way Russia took over the land was the most scientific way. There was no equality in the land distribution. I am not so sure but that in the future we will have a reactionary class of small farmers, opposing progress and oppressing their laborers, as a result of the unscientific and disorderly grabbing of the land. But it must be remembered that that is what 150,000,000 people did.

"Though I am not a member of the Bolsheviki and do not approve of the course of the Russian revolution, I must say that the Bolsheviki were the only ones who introduced order out of chaos," he continued. "They have been called anarchists, but it would take a scholar many years to analyze the vast system of laws they introduced. They are not anarchists, but centralists —they say that the State represents the people, and in their minds the people are the peasants, soldiers, and workers. I do not agree with their policies, but I know they have maintained order for fourteen months and they show no signs of weakening.

"What shall the civilized world do with Russia? Shall self-determination be applied only to the Czechoslovaks, Poles and other nations and not to the Russians? To ask this is to answer it. Are the Allies going to fight Russia because they do not believe in its political principles? The Russian masses have done things they ought not to have done, but are we to invade Russia and kill them off because we disagree with them? To send an army to Russia would require from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 men, and the war might last from five to fifteen years. That will not help, but will hamper progress."

Favors Lloyd George's Policy.

Lloyd George's policy toward the Soviet Government of Rusia, the policy of a "truce of God," was advocated last night at the Public Forum of the Church of the Ascension, Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, by Jerome Davis, Acting Senior Secretary in charge of all the war work of the Y. M. C. A. in Russia. While Mr. Davis disclaimed belief in the extreme theories of the Bolsheviki, he pleaded for toleration on the ground that if what they wanted was right they ought to have it, but if it was wrong it should be given the opportunity to fail. The speaker returned here from Russia on Nov. 10, one of the last groups from Russia to reach this country.

Mr. Davis outlined the three policies which it is possible at this time to assume toward Russia. "First," he said, "we can attempt to crush out the Bolsheviki. To do this would be impossible were it desirable. Those who have made any study of the question, Professor Harper of Chicago University among them, assure us that it would take 5,000,000 men. Moreover, that policy has apparently been abandoned by the Allies, so I dismiss it.

"There is the second policy of the 'ring of steel.' It is proposed that instead of sending any soldiers of our own, we supply ammunition, clothing, food, and supplies of all kinds to the opponents of the Bolsheviki. There is only one possible result of that line of action. The consequent chaos will make the so-called Red Terror look mild in comparison. The Bolsheviki will attack those classes among them who are their enemies, and former servants of the Czar, like Kolchak, will be the ones to lead the counter-revolution. And finally we shall have on our heads the starvation of hundreds of thousands of women and babies.

"There is only one policy left, and that is the one sponsored by Lloyd George. We must be proud of England for taking this stand, and it must be that it is the result of superior information which Lloyd George has, and which most of you do not. I am inclined to think that it is based on the reports of the British High Commission, reports which have not been published, but which I understand convey the offer of the Bolsheviki to co-operate with the Allies."

LATEST TALE ABOUT CZAR.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 18.—In a special dispatch to the Nationaltidende it is reported that an Austrian diplomatist now in Bergen, having come from Ekaterinburg, told of being sure that the Czar and his family were murdered.

The murder, he said, took place in the house where the family were confined. Bolsheviki entered and called the Czar from his room. When he came out he was shot with a revolver. The Czarina and her daughters were next shot in their rooms. The Czarevitch was sitting in his room reading when he was killed with blows on the head with the butts of revolvers.

The bodies were burned in a baker's oven to leave no traces.

TWO ALLIED ARMIES LINKING UP IN RUSSIA

Siberian Forces Near Junction with Those in Archangel—Recover Flour Seized by Reds.

ARCHANGEL, Jan. 17, (Associated Press.)—The Siberian army is nearing a junction with the forces of the Archangel Government in the Arctic Pichora district, near the Siberian border. According to a telegram received by General Marushewsky, Governor General of the Region of the North, today, General Martinoff, a Siberian plenipotentiary, has arrived at Ust Tsilma, on the Pichora River, where he located a detachment of the northern forces.

General Martinoff arrived in advance of the Siberian troops. He reported they were marching northwestward from Perm through the frozen Mundra territory. He said they already had taken the village of Lapina, on the other side of the Ural Mountains, about 275 miles away, and were marching toward the Pichora River.

The Siberians, on capturing the territory about Lapina, according to General Martinoff's telegram, recovered a great quantity of flour, shipped from Siberia for consumption by the populace of the Archangel district. The flour was seized by the Bolsheviki when they controlled this territory.

Small Russian volunteer detachments for a long time have been operating near the mouth of the Pichora River. There is a direct telegraph line from Ust Tsilma to Archangel.

POLITICAL PRISONERS KILLED AT OMSK

Prominent Men Freed by Reds Had Returned to Prison at Government's Urging.

VLADIVOSTOK, Jan. 17, (Associated Press.)—Of the prisoners who were released from jail at Omsk as the result of an abortive Bolshevist plot late in December, nine of those who voluntarily returned were killed by the military without the knowledge of Admiral Kolchak, the Supreme Governor of the Omsk Government, or of his Ministers, according to information that has just come to light.

The motive of the executions is obscure, but the inclusion among the nine victims of several important members of the Consituent Assembly, prominent journalists, and public leaders points, in the minds of many, to the use of Bolsheviat methods of intimidation and suppression of the idea of a Constituent Assembly.

When the jail was opened on the night of Dec. 22 the political prisoners at first refused to leave their cells, and it is said they were threatened with being shot if they persisted. They were told, it is reported, that the authority of Omsk had been seized by the Bolsheviki.

The following day, when it became clear that the plot had failed, the Government issued a proclamation urging those who had been released to return to prison under pain of court-martial. The military authorities and the Ministry of Justice appealed to the relatives of the men released, advising their immediate return, and the fugitives were brought to prison by their wives, relatives, and acquaintances.

At 3 o'clock in the morning of Dec. 24 an automobile stopped at the jail and took away nine of the prisoners. All of these have since completely disappeared. When the facts became known to the Council of Ministers the supreme ruler, Admiral Kolchak, sent a special detachment of soldiers to guard the prison.

FINNS HELPED DEFEAT REDS.

Expedition to Esthonia Said to Have Been Successful.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 18.—A special dispatch to the National Tidende of Stockholm gives the information that General Hjalmarsson has returned from Esthonia and reported that the Finnish expedition was attended with success.

The situation in Livonia is serious, and the Government probably will leave Libau for Reval for some time to avoid bloodshed. An appeal has been telegraphed to Stockholm for quick help of the Swedish expedition.

MME. BRESHKOVSKAYA TELLS OF RUSSIA'S NEED

Warns That Any Government Set Up There Will Fall Unless Aided at Once.

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 19.—If help is not forthcoming at once, any Government set up in Russia will fail, said Mme. Catherine Breshkovskaya, known as the "Grandmother of the Russian Revolution," who arrived here today from the Orient. Czechoslovak, rather than allied troops are wanted in Russia, she declared.

"The coming of Czechoslovak soldiers would be welcomed by the people as they would welcome the coming of Christ," she said.

The mission of the Bolsheviki is to destroy, not to build, to ruin and not to succor—that is the estimate which Madame Breshkovskaya places upon the force which is ruling a large part of Russia today.

Although Madame Breshkovskaya celebrated her seventy-fifty birthday at sea, her voyage across the Pacific appeared not to have tired her. There was a small group of friends on the dock to greet her when the Japanese liner Kamo Maru moored. There was an affectionate greeting between her and Helen Stuart Dudley of Boston, who had come to accompany her across the continent. Throwing herself into the arms of the younger woman, she exclaimed:

"Oh, dear, dear, is it true, is it true? I'm in America at last with my friends. Here I am in America at last. My dear, dear Helena."

The delegation of Czechoslovaks and the committee from the Bohemian National Alliance stood with uncovered heads when Madame Breshkovskaya came down the gangplank.

Asked if she had knowledge of a Bolshevist movement in America, she replied: "Bolsheviki in this country, contending against the Government? You do not know what Bolsheviki are. There may be Bolshevist sympathizers, but certainly not the destroyers we have in Russia. However, Bolsheviki are Bolsheviki wherever they are. They tear down; they destroy. Ruination is their motto. They are not constructors.

"Two years ago we had a successful revolution. All at once the reins of government were taken over by the people. We ought only to construct and that is what we had in view. Then arose the Bolsheviki and since then there has been only destruction. The millions of illiterates in my country never knew there was a Little Russia, a Siberia, or any of the other divisions of Russia. They were never permitted to take part. How can such people attain such liberties as they strive for? One-half the Socialists who wanted to build and to educate were sentenced to Siberia, to Russian prisons or worse. The future of my country depends upon its ability to organize and upon its conceptions of democracy. Russia needs system, order, education, and peaceful industry.

"My purpose in coming here is to find warm hearts who will pity and succor the 4,000,000 orphans in Russia. It is a work to which I shall devote the remaining years of my life."

OYSTER BAY PLANS A ROOSEVELT PARK

Many Citizens Consider Playground Best Memorial for ex-President.

FORM LOCAL ORGANIZATION

Widow and Daughter of Rough Rider Place Flowers on the Colonel's Grave.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Jan. 19.—Although no definite decision has as yet been reached, the prevailing sentiment is that the home town of the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt will establish a large waterfront park as a memorial to the former President. Citizens under the leadership of William Loeb, Jr., who was at one time the Colonel's private secretary, are being organized into a permanent body, and officers will be elected next Friday evening.

Colonel Roosevelt believed in parks for the people, and this village has none. Situated near the railroad station is a vast area fronting the bay, which has never been improved and has been considered a detriment to the beauty of the village. If this properly is secured, it is proposed to fill-in many places and to erect bulkheads. A huge playground and an athletic field would be laid out. It is known that Colonel Roosevelt always favored such ideas and that he was opposed to statues and the like. The park will be named Roosevelt Memorial Park and in it will have some suitable memorial, such as a rostrum properly inscribed.

The movement for a memorial in this town will be national in character. It is believed that contributions will be received from all sections of the country. Every one who subscribes to the fund will be made an honorary member of the association, which will be known as the Roosevelt Memorial Association of Oyster Bay. Active members of the association residing in Oyster Bay will be assessed $10 yearly for the support of the organization. The management of the association will be conducted by the Oyster Bay residents.

Several Thousand Subscribed.

Commenting on the plans, Mr. Loeb today said that a constitution and by-laws had been drawn up, and that with the election of officers on Friday means of securing contributions will be taken up. Already several thousand dollars have been received, and it is expected that following the memorial meetings in all parts of this country on Feb. 9 many additional contributions will be received.

Associated with Mr. Loeb in the movement are John F. Bermingham, Mortimer L. Schiff, Colgate Hoyt, Joseph H. Sears, George Bullock, Frederick Remington, William L. Peters, Howard C. Smith, William L. Swan, Rev. Father Canivan, Rev. Dr. George Taimage and William McCoun.

Hundreds of persons today visited the little cemetery where Colonel Roosevelt is buried. Many were soldiers and sailors who stood at attention. Among the visitors were a little girl and her mother. The girl placed a small bouquet of pinks on the grave, and as she was leaving her mother remarked:

"My husband was a Rough Rider under the Colonel. He has told Mary many stories about him. She always wanted to see him and when he died she wanted to come here and put flowers on the grave. My husband died about a year ago, and he and the Colonel frequently met and talked over the times in Cuba. Every man in my husband's regiment worshipped the Colonel."

Memorial services in honor of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt were conducted by the Rev. William T. Manning yesterday afternoon in the home of Mrs. John Henry Hammond, 9 East Ninety-first Street. The meeting was arranged under the auspices of the Woman's Roosevelt Memorial Committee, of which Mrs. William Curtis Demorest is the Acting Chairman.

Following the service, an informal discussion of the character of the proposed memorial was held. Among the suggestions offered were the endowment of a Roosevelt chair for the study of American history in Barnard College; the purchase of Madison Square Garden as a community centre, and the erection of an equestrian statue of the former President. No action was taken on the proposals.

The Chairman announced that a meeting would be held next Monday morning, Jan. 27, at a place yet to be determined, to complete the organization of the committee. A nominating committee of five was appointed to report at that meeting.

HILLIS TALKS OF ROOSEVELT.

Pays High Tribute to Patriotic, Christian Qualities.

Theodore Roosevelt was eulogized last night in a sermon at the Marble Church, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street, by the Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. There was not a vacant pew in the auditorium. The speaker took for his text: "For his sword was lifted unto heaven."

"A certain wonderful intellect had Theodore Roosevelt," Dr. Hillis said, "that made him a leader of men. A certain marvelous vision was his gift that inspired him to greater things than were dreamed of by his critics. He had not only a great intellect, but a great heart, from which he lent to the people the Christian impulse with which it was filled.

"Our country had so few men of really great intellect that we could not afford to lose one of them. But the greatest of all is gone, now that Theodore Roosevelt has passed. The death of this man has impoverished the land. The uniqueness of his temperament is to be traced to his forbears. Everything that was wise he derived from his father; every Christian motive he possessed he derived from his mother.

"How marvelous his intellect, that blazed like a planet in the skies and lighted the intellectual way for his fellows!

"Theodore Roosevelt forgot his friends, forgot everything, when his country called, and it was ever calling this man. Once upon a time he dwelt upon the fact that it might come to pass that the rich man might elect his private Congressmen and his private Senator, he even might go so far as to elect his private President, and then, asked Roosevelt, where will the poor man be?

"And this noble man has gone home to God. The world will celebrate him by the splendid gifts he gives us, this Christian statesman, and we would indeed all be beggars if we resisted the to all his splendid gifts we have added perfection. He was not perfect, but he was a Christian—a true American."

NEWPORT OFFICERS LEAVE.

Training School to End After Giving Four Classes to Navy.

NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 19.—Upon the graduation next Wednesday of cadets from the Second Naval District Training School for Officers, of which Lieutenant Alexander Hamilton Rice, U. S. N. R. F., is director, the school will cease to exists, with a record of training four classes of ensign's rank for every branch of the Naval Service since its establishment at the beginning of the war.

Lieutenant Rice is planning to go later to Brazil on a scientific expedition. Lieutenant Louis S. Treadwell, in command of the material section, and Lieutenant Robert Potter of the shore patrol in Newport since the war, will be placed on the inactive list of the navy.

Paymaster Albert H. Ely, Jr., attached to the Second District receiving barracks, has been assigned to the U. S. S. Panaman, to sail for France.

Another Sunday Paper for London.

LONDON, Dec. 31.—With the lifting of an embargo on new newspapers, a war-time measure, announcement is made of another Sunday paper for London, The Sunday Express, which is being produced by the publishers of The Daily Express. Lord Beaverbrook, until recently Minister of Information, is understood to be devoting his personal attention to the venture. The war has produced four new publications, all Sunday papers. Two dailies disappeared, The Standard and The Citizen.

Northern Pacific Reaches Harbor.

The transport Northern Pacific, which was floated on Saturday night after being aground eighteen days on a sandbar off Fire Island, arrived off Stapleton yesterday afternoon in charge of three wrecking tugs, and anchored. It is expected that she will go to the Brooklyn Navy Yard today. The crew did not come ashore.

CANADIAN ACE SPEAKS HERE

Colonel Bishop Tells How He Downed 72 German Pilots.

Colonel William A. Bishop, "Ace of Aces," the Canadian flier, who is accredited with having downed 72 German airplanes officially, and 110 unofficially, gave his first lecture at the Lexington Theatre last night. A large audience heard him describe his experiences at the front. Colonel Bishop prefaced his talk with a tribute to the American pilots, whom he described as "unsurpassable," and told of the exploits of three Americans who had been members of his squadron.

In telling of his first successful fight, which occurred on March 25, 1917, Colonel Bishop said that the thrill of exultation he experienced when he saw his opponent start to fall toward the ground was changed a few seconds later to a sense of pity as he thought of the fate of the man. Having downed his man, he said he glided toward the earth with his motor off. In the flush of victory he became overexcited and came within range of ten antiaircraft guns, which began pouring shot at him. When he tried to start his engine again he found it refused to function. His machine was going at the rate of 150 miles an hour, which Colonel Bishop said enabled him to mount a considerable distance in the air. He was able to glide back to his own lines, landing in No Man's Land. With the aid of five British who crawled from their trenches Colonel Bishop said he was able to rescue his airplane.

Colonel Bishop told many tales of himself and his comrades. Particularly effective was his description of his last fight, in which he downed five machines in twelve minutes. He had flown about ten miles over the German lines, he said, when five German pilots, evidently thinking he was lost, attacked him. He had the good luck, which is the reason given by Colonel Bishop for each one of his successes, to down two of the trio as soon as they got close to him. Meanwhile, two more enemy planes joined the fray, coming up from behind. Manipulating his own machine, Colonel Bishop said he managed to escape their fire and cause one machine of the original five to crash into another. The newcomers becoming frightened flew away. Colonel Bishop shot down a German two-seater on his return to his own lines.

In closing Colonel Bishop scored those who say that now that the war is over the Germans should be forgiven. He said such an attitude was not fair to the men who had given their lives to the cause.

READY FOR BIG FUR SALE.

Pelts Worth Nearly $9,000,000 to be Offered at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 19.—More than 5,000,000 pelts, that are expected to bring between $8,300,000 and $9,000,000, will be offered here tomorrow at the biggest auction sale of furs ever held. Buyers from Russia and other European countries will attend the nine-day sale at the International Fur Exchange.

Among the large offerings at the sale, in which every fur-producing country of the world will be represented, are 855,000 muskrat skins, 300,000 opossum, 215,000 skunk, 810,000 Russian squirrel, 130,000 raccoon, 100,000 mink, 118,000 ermine, 178,000 marmots, 750,000 moles, and 135,000 nutria. Of the foxes there will be 30,000 red, 1,200 cross, 1,000 white, 321 blue, 1,100 silver, 8,500 gray, 6,100 Patagonian, and 10,000 Argentine.

The offerings also include 1,400 bear, 130 polar bear, 1,800 Russian sables, 53,000 kolinsky, 77,500 Australian ringtail opossum, 400 mountain lion, 65,000 China mink, 96,000 Japanese mink, 9,000 Japanese fox, 500 Japanese badger, and 6,000 Japanese marten, besides thousands of others.

"How long will you be self-supporting?"

Take one-hundred men of middle age. Where will they all be at sixty-five? According to statistics, nearly 40 per cent will be dead. More than half will be dependents. Only 10 per cent will be vigorous enough to support themselves. Healthy men and women live to ripe, active old age. It pays to keep well.

THE ACCESSORIES OF DRESS FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN

We attach the utmost importance to the selection and production of the proper furnishings, headwear, footwear and accessories of dress, so essential to the completion of a correct outfit for a boy or young man.

Just as we rely upon the best European sources for correct models for outer apparel, so do we depend upon equally authentic sources to supply us with new ideas for the creation of De Pinna furnishings, and we are constantly importing materials for shirtings and neckwear, together with finished products from the leading English makers of hosiery and underwear.

Untying the Knot

To hasten the return to normal trade conditions at home and relations abroad we must promptly work our way out of the financial tangle we are in.

Consider Europe's debt to the United States. It is in the form of promissory notes, not collateralled, nor in any way protected, but resembling, except that they bear no definite maturities, the notes discounted by banks for customers in good standing.

Why should not these obligations, with maturities fixed and method of redemption agreed upon, be reissued in the form of acceptances, and marketed exactly as any trade acceptance at the rate of interest of the original debt, five per cent.? Needless to say, they would sell readily, and, moreover, they would be disposed of in a free market. There would be no necessity of proportioning them among the banks, but rather would they be distributed by the law of supply and demand.

The immediate result would be to free the credit now restricted, and so sorely needed by the business community. The wheels of trade would begin to turn, and part of the problem of re-employment of our returning forces would be solved. Moreover, such disposition of the obligations would afford a basis for the education of the American public in the purchase of foreign securities.

Above all, this suggested arrangement would obviate the necessity for another Liberty Bond issue with its accompanying complement of taxes. The Government in presenting a new loan will be like a merchant with a strong-box full of prime five per cent. securities, with a ready market, going to his bank in a crisis to borrow when he could sell without sacrifice.

My desire is to become identified with a progressive concern of good standing, where I can apply my knowledge of business principles in buying, selling and economic factory systems, and through energy and resourcefulness produce greater profits.

To me, a man of 28, the future is of more vital interest than the present. Will submit highest references as to character and ability, and am prepared to make a sincerity investment if desired. Address Executive, B 181 Times.

MANN DENOUNCED BY GILLETT FORCES

Holds That His Election as Speaker Would Mean Return to Cannonism.

ATTACKS HIS WAR RECORD

Characterizes Illinois Leader as a Reactionary and Parliamentarian Rather Than a Statesman.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—In a statement circulated tonight in support of the candidacy of Representative Gillett of Massachusetts for Speaker of the House, the Gillett committee urges his selection as a liberal, and refers to James R. Mann of Illinois as a reactionary and "merely a parliamentarian rather than a statesman." The committee, however, insists that there is no personal acrimony in the fight, and that none will be permitted.

"In anticipation of a special session of the Sixty-sixth Congress prior to next December," says the statement, "consideration of the speakership has become a very serious question in the minds of the Republican members of the incoming House; also from advices received in Washington it appears to have become an equally serious subject in the consideration of the people of the country. In the last election the people intrusted the welfare of the country to a Republican Congress; in the next national election they will be asked to continue that trust and also to elect a Republican President. So the Republicans appreciate this trust and realize their direct responsibility to the people.

"On announcement last November that the Republicans had won control of the next Congress, friends of Representative James R. Mann of Illinois lost no time in 'nominating' him for Speaker and were ready to close the nominations. Opposition to Mann, however, at once developed throughout the country and in the House, and the anti-Mann and liberal elements together turned to Frederick H. Gillett of Massachusetts as the representative of popular sentiment. Mann shortly became the 'reactionary' candidate and Gillett the liberal. Other possibilities have been mentioned, but the fight is believed to centre between Mann and Gillett.

"For Mann the chief claim seems to be that he is 'entitled' to the speakership by virtue of his services as Republican floor leader. Against him are voiced the arguments that he is 'reactionary,' that he is merely a parliamentarian rather than a statesman, that he would, in fact, if not in theory, abolish the selection of committees by the House itself, and that he would turn the clock back to the days when 'Uncle Joe' Cannon was 'czar' and ruled the House with an iron hand until deposed. Cannon, by the way, is Mann's chief campaign manager, and his mantle is said to have fallen on Mann's shoulders.

"Apparently, neither the country at large nor the Republicans of the incoming House are disposed to tolerate a return to one-man rule; the Republicans of the House have been controlled by one man for years, it is argued, and the time has come when they should be free from such domination and dictatorship. As belief prevails that Mann would insist on naming the Republican membership of the House committees, more than one Republican member is chary of opposing Mann in the open, but subsurface opposition to him is growing.

"In selecting Gillett as their champion, the anti-Mann forces express faith in his liberal policies and confidence in his judgment and fairness. For two decades, Gillett has been one of the leading members of the junior chamber, and he has kept pace with the progress of succeeding years, largely through his activities in the great Committee on Appropriations, which have kept him in close touch with the sentiments of the people at large. Gillett's war record is 100 per cent. American, while Mann's falls far below that figure, say observers, and Gillett's record as floor leader in long absences of Mann is said to measure up fully to that of Mann.

"With Gillett as Speaker, Republicans of the next House feel that all committees will be selected by the Republican House membership without fear of dictation by the Speaker, and no one has thought it necessary to require from him a promise to forget that any man or group of men opposed his election, in fear of punishment if he should win.

"No personal acrimony has developed so far in the contest, nor is any expected or to be permitted."

State Constabulary Protects Suburbs

BREWSTER, Jan. 19.—Captain J. A. Warner, head of the troop of State Constabulary that patrols New York City's suburbs, has just created, as an experiment, two mobilization stations, which were opened today, with a substation connected with each. The change will afford better police protection. A mobilization bureau was opened in Brewster, and this will afford police protection for Putnam, Westcester, and Dutchess Counties. Sergeant Charles Broadfield is in charge there and has Corporal Arthur Boyce and eleven troopers aiding him. Under the Brewster Bureau a substation will be operated at Carmel. The other station is in Monroe, and will care for Orange, Rockland, and Sullivan Counties. It is under Sergeant Daniel Faber and has a substation at Spring Valley in charge of Corporal Wexler. They have a detail of nine troopers aiding them.

Influenza at Wingdale Prison Farm.

OSSINING, Jan. 19.—Several convicts and guards have been stricken ill with Spanish influenza at the prison farm at Wingdale. The epidemic is so serious that work had to be suspended. Four more, including three convicts, whose condition is critical, have been returned to Sing Sing Hospital. Guards Corrigan, Tenhagen, Dyer, and Sheehy have been taken ill and a number of prisoners still at the prison farmhouse have the disease in a mild form.

MAY STANDARDIZE WORLD WIRELESS

Provisional Interallied Communications Congress to Meet in Paris on Saturday.

NATIONAL OWNERSHIP PLAN

Taking Over by Governments of All High-Power Radio Stations Is Likely to be Recommended.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Standardization of radio communication will be one of many important matters to be discussed at a provisional interallied communications conference to begin at Paris Saturday.

The American representatives to the conference, who have left for France, will be six naval officers, headed by Rear Admiral W. H. G. Bullard, formerly director of naval communications, and his successor, Captain W. D. Todd.

In a statement today explaining the purposes of the conference, the navy department said it was possible that the meeting would make recommendations for permanent international action to be taken by the international radiotelegraphic conference, a meeting of which called to be held in Washington in 1916 was postponed because of the war.

"It is also considered probable," said the statement, "that the next international conference will recommend government ownership of all high-power radio stations. Inasmuch as certain radio stations at present in operation, under favorable conditions can be heard in every part of the globe, it is evident that careful regulations and intimate government supervision will be necessary to prevent interference and consequent international complications."

The relation of radio communications to the present cable situation also is to be discussed at Paris. In this connection the department's statement said radio already had done much to relieve the cable congestion, for, by orders of Postmaster General Burleson, all Government messages not specifically marked to go by cable were sent by radio.

In the Pacific also the naval radio service was said to have formed an immediate and effective bridge of communication with the Philippines, the only direct cable having broken between Guam and Manila. Cable messages are now turned over to the navy at Honolulu and sent by wireless to Cavite for distribution.

BRITISH IN NO ALARM OVER OUR SEA ACTIVITY

London Observer Says World Can Absorb All Tonnage Two Nations Can Build.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—The Sunday Observer, in an article on the future mercantile marine, says:

"The fact that the miracle of a merchant navy in the war was wrought under government control has led certain persons to insist that this control should be continued and extended until at last it would be converted into the complete nationalisation of the shipping industry. That, we are persuaded, is a false policy.

"The whole history of seagoing, from the Phoenician traders to now, is the history of private enterprise, the history of great risks taken for great rewards. Government aid in the shape of subsidies has nowhere succeeded in building a mercantile marine on sound lines where there has not been a national bent toward maritime enterprise.

"None of the arguments, whatever weight we attach to them, in favor of the nationalization of railways or mines is really applicable to shipping.

"Freedom of the seas implies that individuals or a body of individuals who can acquire hull and engines and find men to work for them should be as free to use the seas as Governments or nations, always provided that the equal rights of others are not interfered with. The freer the use, the better for the nations.

"So, we may welcome the news that restrictions on production and the working of merchant shipping are to be removed soon and as far as possible, and that private enterprise shall be allowed to reassert itself in the task of bringing food and the raw materials of industry to the country in the largest quantities obtainable."

Regarding American competition, the article says:

"We see no reason either for impatience or alarm. The shipping trade will follow in the future the laws it has followed in the past. The United States is not a new competitor, and now we can find no reason whatever for serious fear that America will annoy another competitor.

"With the elimination, for years to come at any rate, of the mercantile marines of Germany and Austria and the immense prospects of new trade opened up by the delivery of Palestine, Syria, and Mesopotamia from the Turk, with East and Central Africa in a state of stable peace and ripe for development, the world can absorb as much tonnage as Great Britain and America can put out and work between them."

Seek Man for Reserve Board.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—To fill the vacancy in the Federal Reserve Board caused by the resignation of Frederic A. Delano last July, the Treasury still is hunting for an available man, preferably a business man from the Middle West and a Republican, it was stated today. Frederick H. Goff, Cleveland banker, and Thomas D. Jones, Chicago, President of a zinc company, have been mentioned. Mr. Jones was nominated for the board by President Wilson in 1914, but his appointment was not confirmed.

HAD 41 DIAMOND RINGS.

Man Arrested Here as Suspect in Philadelphia Robbery.

Detectives Curtayne and Appel of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station became instantly alert yesterday morning when a young man approached them at Columbus Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street and inquired whether any pawnshops kept open on Sunday. The detectives questioned the man and then searched him, finding forty-one diamond rings, worth, they said, about $8,000.

At the station the man was entered as Leo J. Gale, 28 years old, of 258 North Eighth Street, Philadelphia, a boilermaker employed in the Hog Island shipyard. He was held as a fugitive from justice, on suspicion that he was implicated in the robbery of a jewelry store in Philadelphia last Thursday night.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 19.—Auto bandits got $10,000 worth of jewelry, chiefly diamonds, when they smashed the show window of O. F. O'Neill's jewelry store, at 2,454 Kensington Avenue, Thursday night. At 7 o'clock that night, while the sidewalk in front of the store was thronged with shoppers, two men drove up in front of the store in a small automobile. With a hammer one of them smashed the window, dumped a trayful of diamonds into his pockets, and sped away in the automobile.

Several hours later, after an alarm had been sent out, a policeman saw the two men at Broad and Berks Streets, but after a chase in which he discharged his pistol several times both made their escape. The police are in possession of the automobile.

PAY TRIBUTE TO LIEBKNECHT

Boston Labor Throng Honors Memory of German Leaders.

BOSTON, Jan. 19.—At a Labor Defense League conference here today 3,000 persons stood for one minute and paid a silent tribute to the memory of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, who were killed in Berlin.

The meeting adopted a resolution urging that political prisoners be liberated. Copies of this will be sent to President Wilson, Secretary of Labor Wilson, and the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court.

TUCKAHOE TO SAIL JAN. 22.

Steamship, Now in Halifax Harbor, Did Not Spring a Leak.

According to a message received from Halifax yesterday by the National Shipping Corporation of 25 Broad Street the steamship Tuckahoe, which arrived there on the night of Jan. 14 with her engine room and boiler room full of water, had not sprung a leak as previously stated. Captain Laurent explained that the water came in through the ash ejecter, and this was being remedied so that the vessel could proceed to sea on Jan. 22 on her voyage to France.

She left New York on Jan. 9 with 4,500 tons of cargo for the Allies and shipped heavy seas on Jan. 12 through the steam steering gear being put out of commission. The hand gear was not sufficient to keep her head on to the big rollers. When the water got up to the level of the first row of fires and flooded the engine room the Captain sent out an S O S call, but finally managed to make Halifax without help.

CONFESSED SLAYER'S SANITY QUESTIONED

Police Hope O'Donnell, if Innocent, May Lead Them to Murderer of Riddell Girl.

HIS ARRAIGNMENT PUT OFF

Prisoner Sang, Prayed, and Shrieked in Court, and Magistrate Ordered Him Back to a Cell.

Questioning the sanity of Patrick O'Donnell, who was put under arrest following a circumstantial confession of the murder of Miss Mary Elizabeth Riddell last Wednesday night in Glen Morris, Richmond Hill, District Attorney O'Leary of Queens will appear this morning before County Judge Humphrey in Long Island City and apply to have O'Donnell sent to Kings County Hospital for observation. Police Headquarters last night assigned 25 more detectives, making 100 in all, to the case.

Because the man's confession included several facts that never had been revealed, the police are still trying to check up O'Donnell's movements. It was intimated that, while the porter may not be guilty, he may prove of material aid in running down the real murderer. It is thought that in his wanderings he may have encountered the real murderer and from him obtained the story of the crime which he has come to believe he committed himself.

Early yesterday morning O'Donnell was before Magistrate Miller in the Jamaica Police Court, but he was without counsel and in such a wrought-up state that Magistrate Miller refused to permit the arraignment and ordered O'Donnell back to the Queens County Jail. Previous to appearing in court the self-confessed murderer was lined up with twenty detectives in the Detective Bureau of the Richmond Hill Station. He was identified by Mrs. Mary Delaney of Morris Park as the man she had seen in the neighborhood of the murder on two occasions before the night the crime was committed. She said she was positive that O'Donnell was this man.

Assistant District Attorney Edward S. Hazleton said yesterday that he had altered his earlier opinion of O'Donnell's guilt, adding that he was not now convinced of the truth of his story. He said, however, that O'Donnell "must know something," but would not definitely place the crime upon O'Donnell's shoulders until his confession was corroborated.

When O'Donnell entered court yesterday his eyes were wild, his face twitched spasmodically, his hair was matted, his clothes unkempt, and he sang hymns, prayed, and shrieked until he had to be taken from the courtroom and placed in the pen. There he tore off his vest and shirt and, fighting the policemen, flung himself on the floor and lay there until he was forced to dress again.

After a hearty meal and some cigarettes the porter seemed somewhat steadier, but as he was being transferred in a prison van to the Queens jail he had another fit, his screams being heard for blocks as the van rumbled along through streets of churchgoers. At the jail he was attended by an ambulance surgeon from St. Mary's Hospital, and was placed in a cell, where he immediately huddled in a corner and began to alternately intone prayers and roar out snatches of songs.

"We are anxious to show that O'Donnell either is or is not the slayer of the girl," said District Attorney O'Leary last night, "for if he really killed the girl then the community is rid of a dangerous maniac. If he is not the right man then a brute is still loose on society who must be hunted down."

"So far," said Captain Carey, of the Homicide Bureau, who is directing the investigating, "there is some doubt cast on the truthfulness of the man's confession, but whether he is lying or not I cannot positively state at present. The finding of the DeKalb Avenue trolley line transfer under the feet of the body of the girl, and the statement of O'Donnell that he had obtained such a transfer on the day he visited his father's home in DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, is a connecting link that cannot be disregarded.

"We have also learned from O'Donnell that on the day he called at his father's house, the day of the murder, he found no one at home. This would account for his father making the statement that his son did not come to his house that day. Then the lacerations on O'Donnell's right hand form a link in the evidence connecting him with the crime. Medical men have declared that when a person dies from a fractured skull their mouth is always shut. In this case the Riddell girl's mouth was open when she was found. This, then, might indicate that O'Donnell clasped his hand over the girl's mouth and that she bit him. The lacerations could have been made by his forcing his hand loose from the girl's mouth after he had struck her over the head in the lot and had fractured her skull and killed her."

The watch that was discovered in the Bronx pawnshop and which seemed to fit the description of the one taken from the wrist of the girl, is not the girl's watch, the police said yesterday. In order, however, to definitely clear up this phase of the mystery, the watch will be taken to Morris Lebold, 166 Bowery, Manhattan, from whom Mr. Riddell purchased it, for further examination today. Moreover, O'Donnell, according to the police, now denies that he took any money or jewelry from the dead girl. The two rings that were supposed to have been slipped from the fingers of the young stenographer were really removed by the medical examiners and are being held by the police.

MURDERER ROBBED VICTIM.

Police Learn Philower's $900 Diamond and Money Were Taken.

Captain Carey of the Homicide Bureau said last night that the police had established that Winfield Scott Philower, who was murdered in his bachelor apartment at 148 East Thirtieth Street on Friday night, had been robbed of his $900 diamond ring and money which he was known to have carried. A brother of the dead man is so ill in a hospital near his home at East Orange, it was learned, that he had not been told of the murder.

A cousin of the victim, Mrs. L. Morrow of East Orange, was summoned to this city yesterday to take charge of the body. Several detectives were assigned to the case from the Homicide Bureau to work with detectives attached to the East Thirty-fifth Street Station. The police had difficulty in finding clues to the identity of the murderer, they said, because of Philower's extreme reticence concerning his personal affairs. Detectives continued to question friends of Philower yesterday, but Captain Carey would not disclose the result of this investigation last night.

FIRE IN TRAINING STATION.

Two Buildings Partly Destroyed at Pelham Bay.

Fire starting in the main galley, where meals are served to most of the 15,000 men in training for the navy at the United States Naval Training Station at Pelham Bay, destroyed part of two buildings and threatened others early this morning.

There is a first-class Fire Department in the station, which was called out by sirens, as soon as the blaze was discovered. A number of patients were carried from the isolation ward, one of the hospital buildings, that was threatened. The police at City Island offered aid, but were informed that the naval organization was having no difficulty in controlling the flames. The police who were sent to Pelham Bay were not admitted to the grounds.

OPPOSE A JEWISH REPUBLIC.

Labor Congress Favors Equal Rights for All Inhabitants of Palestine.

At the final session of the First Jewish Labor Congress, held yesterday at the Yorkville Casino, Eighty-sixth Street and Third Avenue, the delegates, representing 500,000 members of organized labor throughout the country, adopted a resolution favoring a free republic in Palestine where the Jews will have no more rights than any other people until, by immigration or otherwise, they become the majority. At present the Jews compose one-tenth of the population in Palestine.

The resolution committee submitted two resolutions, one favoring a Jewish republic in Palestine, and the other giving equal rights to all inhabitants. The resolution that was adopted follows:

Palestine shall be declared a free, independent republic in which no nationality, whether a minority or majority people, shall have any special rights; that all nationalities inhabiting the country shall have equal rights, which shall be guaranteed by the national autonomy of each separate nationality; and that because the Jewish nationality in Palestine is smaller and weaker than the others, international guarantee shall be established by the peace covenant, which will give the Jewish nationality the possibility of free development and of a free, unhindered national life, on the basis of equal rights with all other nationalities in Palestine, and the possibilities shall include the right of free immigration and colonization.

Those that spoke in favor of the resolution making Palestine a Jewish republic were Dr. C. H. Jitlovsky, Dr. B. Feigman, and Alderman B. C. Vladeck, Chairman. Those whose views were anti-Zionistic were Judge Jacob Pankin, M. Olgon, and J. B. Salutsky, Secretary of the Jewish National Workmen's Committee, under whose auspices the congress was held.

BOOK OF SOLDIER LETTERS.

Otto H. Kahn Urges the Preserving of 500 of the Most Striking.

The plan of preserving in book form 500 of the most striking letters written by soldiers in France is being urged by Otto H. Kahn. He outlined his plan as follows when he addressed the alumni of Rutgers College last week:

"The letters are not only in the true sense of the term human documents, of the rarest value, but emanating as they do from writers of the widest diversity of birth, upbringing, occupation, and race, they are a supreme demonstration of the workings of the crucible which is America, and of the irresistibly compelling power of its appeal and spirit, upon those who are brought within its orbit. They ought to be made known and accessible as widely as possible in a form which will make them permanent national possessions, so that their spirit may speak forever to the American people.

"I should like, therefore, to throw out the suggestion whether a scheme roughly on the following lines, might not be found practicable: A national committee to be constituted, composed of a small number of distinguished and eminently qualified men. This committee would invite those who have received soldiers' letters which they believe to be noteworthy in the sense I have tried to indicate, to send such letters or copies of them to subcommittees designated for each state. A selection would then be made, of say 500 letters, and these would be published in a volume, the proceeds from the sale of which would go to some suitable purpose commemorative of the war."

DETECTIVES SHOT IN RAID.

Twenty Men Caught in Alleged Gambling House, Held in $1,000 Bail Each.

Detective John Walsh of Inspector Henry's staff was shot through the arm, Detective John McLaughlin got a bullet through his coat sleeve, and a third bullet narrowly missed a third detective when Inspector Henry led a group of his men early yesterday morning in a raid on an apartment house in West Fifty-seventh Street in which, it was charged, a crap game was in progress.

With the assistance of police reserves and soldiers and sailors the detectives arrested twenty men. Aaron Rothstein of 355 West Eighty-fourth Street was charged with violation of the Sullivan law and felonious assault. The police say they found loaded dice in the apartment and that one man said he had lost $1,000.

Magistrate Mancuso in West Side Court changed the charge against the nineteen from disorderly conduct to suspicion of felonious assault and held them in $1,000 bail each for examination tomorrow. The police said that a week ago Rothstein was robbed of $11,000 in a gambling house in West Street and that two years ago two men robbed him of $18,000.

LOST TRUNK FROM HIS AUTO

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Jan. 19.—Somewhere between New York and Atlantic City a trunk containing diamonds and other jewels valued at $12,000 was shaken loose Saturday afternon from the rear of an automobile driven by F. K. Mayer, a wealthy New Yorker, on his way to the shore. The loss was not discovered until he drove up to a beach front hotel last night.

An all-night search of the highway over which Mr. Mayer traveled was started. Chartering a taxicab, he retraced the route by which he had come, playing the headlight on either side of the road. At Freehold he discovered a strap by which the trunk was fastened to the machine. A further search for a mile on either side of the road was made, but the missing trunk was not found. Mayer reported his loss to the police, but they have been unable to find any trace of the trunk.

ASKS FUND FOR CANTORS.

Judge Rosalsky Addresses Association at Anniversary.

The twenty-fifth anniversary celebration of the Cantors' Association of America took place last evening at Temple Rodeph Sholom, Lexington Avenue and Sixty-third Street. Besides many traditional melodies and patriotic songs by the members of the association who were present, the Rev. Josef Rosenblatt sang a tenor solo, and Max Rosen, the violinist, played.

Addresses of praise for the Cantors' Association were made by Judge Otto A. Rosalsky, who presided, and by Rabbi Lyons. Judge Rosalsky asked for contributions for the support of the widows and orphans of the members of the association who had died. He said that New York was called upon to give $100,000.

SIX PERISH AS HOME BURNS.

Two Others Probably Fatally Injured in Philadelphia Fire.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 19.—Six persons were burned to death and two others probably fatally injured tonight in a fire that destroyed the home of Nicola Napolitano, in the southern section of the city. Three of the victims were children of Napolitano and the others were Patrick Martinelli and his wife and child, who occupied an upper floor of the house. Napolitano's other two children were so badly burned that it is feared they cannot live.

The fire started during the absence of Napolitano and his wife and is believed to have been due to an exploding oil stove.

FILM CONCERNS COMBINE.

Three Companies Arrange to Merge in Operation.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 19.—Announcement is made here of the merger of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., the World Film Company, and the Peerless Producing Company of Fort Lee, N. J., by J. A. Berst, President of the first named corporation; Ricord Gradwell, President of the second, and Milton M. Goldsmith, Treasurer of the third.

It was stated that the new organization would control 1,300 motion picture theatres in the United States.

FACE GREAT STRIKE IN GARMENT TRADE

35,000 Women in 800 Shops Expected to Quit Work Tomorrow.

EMPLOYERS REMAIN FIRM

Head of Union Expresses Confidence That Workers Will Obtain Their Demands.

Hope of averting the threatened garment workers' strike involving 35,000 women in more than 800 shops, vanished last night when Harry A. Gordon, counsel for the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association, asserted that the association and many independent shop owners would "resist the union's effort to enslave us, to the limit of our ability." Benjamin Schlesinger, President of the union, on the other hand, pointed to the strike vote of the unionists, announced on Saturday, and said that this was a fair index of the sentiment of the workers.

It was asserted that the strike would commence in the forenoon tomorrow. The exact hour for the walkout will be determined today by a committee. Union leaders said that more than 40,000 would eventually leave their machines in the various shops, and it was expected that the cutters and pressers, the men employes, would take sympathetic action.

In a letter to the Mayor, under Friday's date, which is published as a newspaper advertisement this morning, Morris Weiss, President of the Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association, charges that the prospective strikers were responsible for the Red disturbances at Madison Square Garden meetings.

"At the outset," says the letter, "we desire to call your attention to the fact that the persons on whose behalf the unions has written to you are the same persons against whom it recently became imperative, for the safety of the city, to adopt a special ordinance prohibiting the display of the red flag, the generally recognized emblem of anarchy; the same persons who are responsible for the recent disorders at Madison Square Garden, and the same persons who, together with their friends, at the Mayoralty election, held while the United States was at war, cast the large vote for the Socialist 'peace at any price' candidate for Mayor."

The letter further says that only the ordinary police protection will be required from the Police Department as far as the manufacturers are concerned, in behalf of the association, and supplementing the letter sent to the Mayor, Mr. Gordon last night asserted that the association had done everything in its power to prevent the strike.

"I now see no more hope of averting the strike," he said, "than I do of putting an end to the reign of terror in Russia. The underlying principles of both are the same."

"We think that in four or five weeks the workers will probably come to a realization of the fact that they cannot impose their theories on us. We are not going to do anything which will interfere with the peace of the city. It is my personal opinion that every effort should be made to secure American men and women for this American industry. These women make more money than American school teachers."

"The union realizes the weakness of its position, or its leader, Mr. Schlesinger, would not have to resort to personal attacks on me. This is the man who said in an open meeting, in my hearing: 'We are ten times as strong as you; you might as well stop right here.' As far as I can find out his exaggerated opinion of the strength of his union is his only excuse for tearing the industry asunder."

In a statement last night Benjamin Schlesinger denied that he had ever said that the union was ten times as strong as the association of manufacturers.

"This assertion is baseless," he said. "The manufacturers are purposely using that language in order to prejudice the public. We have indulged in no boasting, and will indulge in none. Nevertheless, we have confidence in our ability to secure our demands. Back of this action are the pocketbooks of 140,000 members of this union, who will come to the assistance of the workers. Before the strike actually takes place the manufacturers in certain shops have already discharged some twelve thousand employes. They were not reported to have been discharged, but simply 'laid off.'

"We have carefully planned to watch the action of the manufacturers in other cities. They may think that they can have their goods made up in other cities. The American Federation of Labor has issued instructions to its various branches to be on the lookout for such a plan."

32 TENANTS FACE EVICTION.

Protesting Bronx Families Served with Dispossess Notices.

A fight by tenants against a landlord has been waged in the Bronx by the families living in 854, 860, and 864 East 172d Street. Since they refused to pay an increased rent, the landlord, William B. Keller of 99 Nassau Street, served them with dispossess notices, and this morning thirty-two families will be forced to vacate their apartments.

On Dec. 1 Keller took over the apartment houses and told the tenants that he would have to impose an increase of from $2 to $6 a month. A meeting of the tenants was called and Abraham Stupnicker, Vice President of the Greater New York Tenants' League, of 860 East 172d Street, was elected Chairman of a protest committee. The tenants agreed to accept an increase of $3 a month, but Keller insisted upon the higher rate. In addition to this, he wanted each tenant to take a lease for nine months.

When Keller came for the rents on Jan. 1, thirty-two of the sixty tenants refused to pay him. These were summoned to the Municipal Court, where Judge Morris heard the cases. The first five were instructed to pay the increased rate. The others failed to go to court. Students of economics at the New York University School of Commerce will assist in a city-wide investigation into charges of landlord profiteering, beginning tomorrow.

AID VOLUNTEER FIREMEN.

Entertainment at Hippodrome for Sick Benefit Fund.

An entertainment to provide a sick benefit fund for the Auxiliary Corps of the Fire Department, composed of some 3,000 patriotic citizens who volunteered as fire fighters during the war emergency, many of whom took the places of regular firemen called away to military service, took place at the Hippodrome last night. The total amount of the proceeds was not known last night, but it is expected that the sales of seats will realize a substantial fund. The house was crowded with the friends and relatives of the regulars and volunteers.

Little is known by the public of the work of these volunteer firemen, but the value of their service has been appreciated and admitted by Fire Commissioner T. J. Drennan and Chief John Kenlon and other officers of the regular department. They were organized and chiefly financed by Eli Joseph, a merchant, who was appointed a Special Deputy Fire Commissioner to undertake the work, in which he was assisted by Deputy Chief Thomas R. Langford. The larger number of the volunteers will continue in the service until the personnel of the regular force becomes normal again.

When the "war firemen" are finally disbanded each officer and member will receive a badge in recognition of his service. Many of them have already been commended for merit and distinguished services, nineteen of them having taken part in the rescue work at the wreck of the B. R. T. train in the Malbone Street tunnel.

PANAMA RENEWS PROTEST.

Again Resents General Blackford's Charges Regarding Vice.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—In accordance with a resolution passed yesterday by the Panama National Assembly, the Panama Legation here was instructed today by its Government to call the attention of the State Department to the Assembly's recent protest against statements regarding vice conditions in the cities of Panama and Colon made last January by Brig. Gen. Blackford, commanding American troops in the canal zone.

The legation was directed to "maintain the protest" submitted to the department on Nov. 23 with "the purpose of obtaining the satisfaction that the offenses to Panama implied in the remarks of General Blackford require."

SUGGEST TAX CHANGE FOR STATE DEFICIT

Chairmen of Legislature Committees Have Radical Proposals Affecting Realty.

TO RAISE $12,000,000 MORE

Plan to Levy on Property Used for Fraternal, Educational, Religious, and Philanthropic Purposes.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 19.—New York State faces a deficit this year of about $12,000,000, according to Senator Frederick M. Davenport and Assemblyman Franklin W. Judson, Chairman of the Tax Committees of the Legislature, who issued today an analysis of the taxation problems which confront the State, as well as suggestions for remedies. Among these latter is the suggestion that "sound legislation" be enacted which will "tax all interests and individuals, making everybody an equal party to the Government."

The statement points out that the present tax of 3 per cent. on the net income of manufacturing and incorporated mercantile companies has yielded about $30,000,000, of which a return of one-third is made to the municipalities, and it suggests that this tax, applied to all sources, including all businesses and individuals, would yield about $12,000,000 more, or enough to make up the State's deficit this year.

"Another suggestion," the statement says, "is to stop all exemptions on real property, with the exception of the property of the State, making all fraternal, educational, philanthropic, religious, and charitable institutions bear their equal proportion with other real property. If this is done the tax rate will be materially decreased. Also, in connection with real property it has been suggested that every owner be compelled to make a statement of the value of his property, and that a fluctuation of 20 per cent. be allowed on his sworn affidavit as to the true and real value of the property, and that if at any time he desired to sell the property this would be considered a stipulated price. We would then have a full and accurate listing of the value of all real property throughout the State, doing away with the great discrepancies between counties on the question of equalization. The greatest ills of the regular tax law is the injustice of equalities between different sections of the State.

"Special franchise taxes have always been a troublesome source of revenue, being continually in the courts and the different localities not knowing from time to time when they are to be compelled to make rebates. One suggested way of overcoming this difficulty would be to adopt the present Massachusetts franchise tax on public utilities of 1 per cent. on gross income. This would be a simple method and would do away with the enormous amount of litigation."

PRAISE PERKINS NOMINATION

Consumers' League Adopts Resolutions—Senate Urged to Confirm.

Governor Smith's nomination of Frances Perkins for State Industrial Commissioner was approved yesterday in a resolution adopted by the Consumers' League of New York City. The resolution recited that in view of the fact that Miss Perkins "was largely instrumental in securing the fifty-four hour law for women workers in stores and factories," and that while Secretary of the Committee of Safety of New York City she was a leader in the movement for fire protection, the State Senate was urged to confirm her appointment.

The league also called on all its members to write to their Senators urging ratification of the nomination of Miss Perkins.

WOMAN KILLED IN HOLDUP.

Jamaica Saloon Keeper's Wife Shot in Struggle with Bandits.

Four holdup men entered the saloon of a man known as Holbach, on Lahey Avenue, Jamaica, Queens Borough, at 2:20 this morning with drawn revolvers. In the row that followed one of the bandits shot and killed the saloon keeper's wife.

TEN RESCUED AT FIRE.

Firemen with Ladders Save Members of Two Families.

Two families on the top floor of 112 West Sixty-first Street were rescued late last night by firemen when a fire which started in some unknown manner in the basement and spread to the fourth floor through the airshaft cut off their escape from the building. Three firemen who were trapped in a rear kitchen of one of the fourth floor flats were also rescued by their comrades.

Ladders were raised and Mrs. Catharine Platman and her two small children and John Donnell, his wife, and five children were taken from the two apartments. In fighting the fire Lieutenant Mullaly and Firemen Doyle and Morris of Engine Company 40 were trapped in the kitchen in one of the apartments on the fourth floor. Comrades heard their cries for help, and a ladder was raised to them from the rear.

Mrs. Mary Kelly, who is ill with influenza, lives on the second floor. When the firemen came to take her out she refused to leave. A policeman volunteered to stay with her and to take her from the building if the fire threatened the apartment.

Need Men for Marine Corps.

Daniel G. Reid, Chairman of the Mayor's Committee of Welcome to Homecoming Troops, yesterday started a new campaign to enlist men in the Marine Corps. He has set aside Room 617, in the committee's headquarters in the Hall of Records, where Sergeant Wagoner will examine the men.

The Marine Corps is now offering men real active service in the Philippines, Santo Domingo, Haiti, and the Virgin Islands. Applicants must stand at least 5 feet 4 inches and weigh not less than 128 pounds. Sergeant Wagoner will be on duty each day from 9 A. M. until 5 P. M.

WHY THE PROTOCOL FAILED IN THE DRESS AND WAIST INDUSTRY

Two Letters That Tell the Story

Letter from Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association to Mayor John F. Hylan

January 17th, 1919.

Hon. John F. Hylan,
Mayor of the City of New York.

Honorable Sir:—

There appears in today's "Times," as a paid advertisement, a copy of a letter which the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union sent you. The Dress & Waist Manufacturers' Association of this city feels in duty bound to bring to your attention, as the Chief Executive of this City, the real situation with respect to the controversy between the Union and the Association.

At the outset, we desire to call to your attention the fact that the persons on whose behalf the Union has written to you, are the same persons against whom it recently became imperative, for the safety of the City, to adopt a special City Ordinance prohibiting the display of the red flag, the generally recognized emblem of anarchy; the same persons who are responsible for the recent disorders in Madison Square Garden, and the same persons who, together with their friends, at the Mayoralty election, held while the United States was at War, cast the large vote for the Socialist "peace at any price" candidate for Mayor.

Back in 1914, at the annual convention of all the locals of the Union, the then General Secretary and spokesman for this very Union, before his administration was replaced by the present Revolutionary leadership, in rendering his official report of the activities of the Union during the year then ending, said:—

> "Our Syndicalists, our so-called revolutionaries, the people who believe that we must apply the sacred principle of the 'Class War' to our relations with the Manufacturers' Association have triumphed. The few men in the Organization who may believe in the possibility of co-operation and good-will between the Employers' Association and the Union are afraid to open their mouths for fear of being accused of being agents of the Manufacturers' Association. The forces of primitive or 'revolutionary' unionism are victorious. The Protocol idea in the Cloak trade is as dead as a door nail. If it still exists in New York it is because both sides are afraid to take the consequences which would result from its abrogation."

It is indeed singular that the Union should ask police protection from you, in the strike which it threatens to call, particularly in the light of its past record for violence and disorder in the community. Is it that it seeks to anticipate a possible charge of violence and disorder against it, by a similar counter-charge against the employers, made before the event, or is it that, in view of the fact that a large portion of the membership of the Union is opposed to the unwarranted strike, and that the Union anticipates that a substantial part of the workers will refuse to participate, and that coercive methods will be necessary, in connection with which they hope for police assistance? On our part, as law-abiding citizens, we are interested in the maintenance of peace and order in this community, and we will do everything in our power, in co-operation with the Police Department, to maintain that peace and order, even though the Union carries out its threat to call a strike.

We do not deem it necessary to request that you give "instructions" to the Police Department to properly discharge its duty in the light of the efficient service which that Department is rendering.

As to the particular points of controversy between us and the Union, we cannot state our position more clearly and succinctly than we did in our letter to the Union of January 10, 1919, a copy of which we are sending you.

I am
Yours most respectfully,
Morris Weiss,
President.

Letter from Dress and Waist Manufacturers' Association to International Ladies' Garment Workers Union

International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, January 10th, 1919.
(Local 25, Local 10 & Local 58),
31 Union Square, New York City.

Attention of Mr. Benjamin Schlesinger, Pres.

Dear Sirs:

Your communication of the 9th inst. has been given due consideration and I beg in reply thereto to advise you as follows:

At the outset, permit me to characterize as a deliberate and unfounded misstatement your assertion that the Association ever even suggested that the workers surrender any "standards which have been in practice in the industry." Nothing which has transpired can warrant such a distortion of the facts. The Conferences came to an early end only because of the arrogant and unreasonable ultimatum which your spokesman imposed, to which I shall refer later.

The Association and your Unions operated under an agreement for six years. That agreement expired on December 31st, 1918. By the terms of the agreement both parties were permitted to make suggestions as to changes. The Union made its demands, the more important of which are set forth in your letter. Other burdensome proposals appear to have been intentionally omitted by you. The Association, on its part, made certain suggestions.

Generally speaking, our proposals were:

FIRST: That since stoppages and strikes are prohibited by the agreement, and notwithstanding, we have had over 200 stoppages within the last 6 months, that the stoppages be ended, by providing that workers who, in violation of the agreement, go on strikes, shall be deemed to have voluntarily terminated their employment.

SECOND: That the employers have freedom in the selection and retention in employment of their employees, subject to a restriction in cases of a discrimination for Union activity.

THIRD: That there be restored to the employer the right to offer inducement to ambitious and thrifty workers by, so far as possible, continuous employment during the slack season, and other minor provisions.

It was arranged that a further Conference be held for the purpose of considering these joint suggestions. At this Conference the question came up as to the priority of discussion. The Union proposed that the Conference immediately proceed to a consideration of the Union's demands for an increase in wages and reduction of hours. The Association contended that the first question for consideration was the fundamental character of the agreement to be entered into between us; that since the conception of the Protocol was that it would make for industrial peace, which object was never effectuated, first to be considered were the questions as to stoppages, distribution of work, and the right to discharge, which concededly have been the underlying causes of all the turmoil, wrangling and disturbances in the industry.

Your unreasonable attitude becomes more apparent in the light of the fact that last August, when your Union demanded an increase in wages based upon an alleged increase in the cost of living due to war conditions, you stipulated in writing that the Conference which was then held should be deemed the first of those intended to precede the making of a new agreement, and, in effect, that the increases which you then asked would be in lieu of those which might be sought at the expiration of the agreement. The question of an increase in wages was then settled, and an increase granted. Yet, at our last Conference and in violation of your express stipulation, you insisted that the question of further increases and reduction of hours be given precedence over all of the proposals of the Association, and finally you, in effect, imposed as a condition of the continuance of the Conferences that the Association withdraw all of its suggestions. You would not even tolerate the making of proposals by employers, much less discuss them. It is indeed singular that the autocratic conduct often ascribed by you to employers should have been so openly displayed by the spokesman for a Union of workers.

In the midst of this discussion your Mr. Schlesinger announced, in unmistakable language and tone, his ultimatum as follows: "We are ten thousand times as strong as you; we might as well stop right here, and we want you to understand, before this Conference goes any further, that when a worker enters the employ of any of your factories and has worked for two weeks the tenure of employment of that worker is for the life of the worker, unless you prove before an Impartial Chairman that you are justified in discharging the worker."

You say very naively in your letter that the Association, in taking its position, has created a "very grave situation which may spell ruin for many manufacturers, and suffering and privation for tens of thousands of workers, etc." How is this statement reconcilable with the fact that three months ago your Union commenced preparations for the general strike which you are now threatening, and then levied an assessment upon all the workers in the industry, for the purpose of providing a War Fund with which to carry on that strike?

You propose in your letter that "our contentions" be submitted to Arbitration. We assume that by "our contentions" you mean "yours" and "ours." Our reply is as follows:

We are very anxious that our position with respect to arbitration be clearly understood. There is no opposition on the part of this Association to the submission of differences arising during the life of and under an agreement, to an outside tribunal for decision. In fact, it is specifically provided in the Association's proposals to you that there be constituted for the life of the agreement a Grievance Board, consisting of an equal number of representatives from the Association and the Union, who, if they are unable to agree, shall name an umpire, an impartial chairman, who shall sit with them, and the decision of a majority of whom shall be binding upon the parties as to all disputes, complaints or grievances that may arise under the agreement. We are, however, unalterably opposed to what has been erroneously termed arbitration and which is nothing more than the delegation to outsiders, who necessarily are uninformed as to conditions in the industry and are not interested parties, of legislative powers to fix wages, hours and other conditions of labor for workers and employers in our industry.

Our experience has demonstrated that the method which we have pursued for the past six years, has all but ruined the industry. The peculiar system of our Protocol by which the Board of Arbitration has thus been not only a Judge, but a "Legislator" for our industry, has created a situation by which vital principles affecting the relations between workers and employers, have been compromised in a futile attempt to maintain an unstable equilibrium between the parties. Vital principles can not be compromised by the mere fiat of outsiders. The inevitable result has been for us, as it has been everywhere under similar conditions, a complete collapse of the entire structure, and a regrettable discrediting of the machinery for the settlement of disputes. No agreement affecting the relations of employer and employee can have permanency, unless made by the parties themselves.

Furthermore, there are involved in the proposals which we have submitted to you questions which from their very nature are not arbitrable. The question whether or no there shall be industrial war, strikes and stoppages under a peace agreement; the question whether an employer shall have the right to give rewards to efficient and competent workers; the question whether an employer shall eventually have the right to dispense with the services of an unsatisfactory employee engaged by day or piece, are not arbitrable and cannot be compromised. Just as the right has never been denied to a worker to leave at will, and that right cannot be compromised or arbitrated, so the right of an employer to dispense with the services of an unsatisfactory employee is likewise non-arbitrable and non-compromisable.

Your proposal that as an alternative the employer be given the absolute right to discharge, and the Union to strike, is entitled to but passing comment. There is no occasion for the making of a peace agreement which sanctions war. Wherever that experiment was made it has proved an absurdity.

There remains only this to be said: It is futile to continue this correspondence. Whether it be by design or by accident, a condition of chaos, disorder, and hostility has been created in our industry, which makes it impossible for us to continue, unless there be radical and fundamental changes in the relations between the parties.

We are desirous of making it entirely clear that we are not unhopeful that the present situation can be solved by further conferences between the parties, but such conferences can only proceed upon the acceptance by both parties of the principles that the agreement must insure industrial peace during its duration, and effective punishment upon those who violate the law of their own agreements; that there be a complete repudiation of the doctrine of "life tenure of employment of the workers"; that there be restored to employers the means of encouraging thrift and ambition in workers through natural channels; and that recognition be given to these principles along the lines suggested by the Association, or by other effective measures.

Unless there is evidenced on the part of your Unions a saner attitude with respect to the present situation in our industry, and recognition of these fundamental principles which we hold are not arbitrable, there will be no other course open to us except to continue without an agreement.

Very truly yours,
MORRIS WEISS,
President.

TIGER'S MUCKRAKER TURNS UPON HYLAN

William Bullock, Who Attacked Mitchel Administration, Calls the Mayor a Failure.

SEES CHAOS IN CITY AFFAIRS

Criticises Budget Order That Only One-twelfth of Year's Funds May Be Spent In Any Month.

Mayor Hylan's administration was assailed in a statement issued yesterday by William Bullock, who supported Mr. Hylan and the entire Tammany ticket in the Mayoralty contest and who was the head of the Bureau of City Inquiry, which was established by Tammany Hall during the term of the late Mayor Mitchel to attack the Fusion administration. Mr. Bullock asserts that Mayor Hylan as an administrator is a failure and that under his leadership the city's government is growing chaotic.

His attack on the Mayor was presented in the form of a report of "The Good Government Bureau" at 150 Nassau Street, which was incorporated on Jan. 6 with Mr. Bullock as Director. Mr. Bullock announces that the bureau is "free of all politics and politicians," and means to publish frequent reports on city affairs without fear or favor, with the aim of getting the support of taxpayers and all citizens interested in good government. The names of citizens who are to constitute its advisory board will soon be made public, the report said.

Mr. Bullock's specific complaint and criticism have to do with an alleged order by the Mayor to heads of departments concerning the city's $248,000,000 budget, which it is alleged has resulted in "throwing the finances and business of the city into confusion," but he calls attention to other matters, as follows:

"Facts of city mismanagement, particularly in the Departments of Education, Police, and Finance, have not come to the public. To hide irregularities the doors of information have been padlocked. I believe there is public need for the corrective force, and foe to corruption, which this bureau purposes to be."

The chief parts of the Mayor's written order to his Commissioners concerning the 1919 budget are quoted thus by Mr. Bullock:

"There are sums of money appropriated for the administration of each department and such sums are divided into specific amounts under each item number for particular purposes. Each sum is provided for the payment of the expenses of that particular purpose or object for twelve months and not more than one-twelfth or such amount can be used legally in any one month. * * *

"It is gross or culpable neglect of duty to spend more than one-twelfth of the money provided for in the budget for any purpose or object in any one month and any violations of these sections by the head of the department or any of his subordinates will be sufficient cause to make necessary a change in the department, as well as being subject to criminal prosecution. * * *

"Heads of departments in the past in some instances have not given the serious consideration that they should to communications from this office. The fact that I am calling this matter to your attention should be sufficient."

This one-twelfth plan of expenditures, which the Mayor contended was required under Sections 1542 and 1551 of the city charter, is a misinterpretation of these provisions of the charter, Mr. Bullock asserts, and he holds that the only legal stipulation is that the total budget appropriations shall not be exceeded during the year. The order became effective on Jan. 1, and Mr. Bullock's summary of what he declares to be serious effects already felt is thus set forth in the report:

"By the Mayor's ruling budget money for such purposes as lighting and heating schools and hospitals cannot be used to meet the needs of Winter months, but must be expended in equal shares each month, the same in midsummer as in Winter. Account No. 1865 in the budget totals $200 for the purchase of a horse for the Department of Health. By Mayor Hylan's order this horse must be bought in twelve parts—the first part in January and the last part in December.

"Such cases could be duplicated from almost every account for other than salaries. Account No. 1157 appropriates $20,207 for band concerts in parks. The Mayor's order permits the expenditure of only one-twelfth of this sum in each of the summer months, the remainder to be left untouched or used for any park music that may be heard in the Fall, Winter or Spring. The order includes the appropriations for contracts, repairs, replacements, equipment, foods, drugs, and each and every account for supplies and materials, for heating, lighting, contingencies, and the general upkeep of the city. Under his ruling budget funds for snow removal cannot all be expended in Winter, but must be reserved for snow removal in Summer."

According to Mr. Bullock the resolution relating to one-twelfth expenditures, which was adopted by the Board of Estimates in 1908, restricts only that portion of the budget appropriations for salaries, upon which he makes this comment:

"The object of the resolution was to end the old-time system of eating up accruals in the salary accounts, due to deaths, resignations and other causes, by raising favored officeholders for the month of December in each year; there being instances recorded of political favorites having had their salaries increased for this one month every year from $1,000 and $1,200 to $12,000 and $15,000."

According to Mr. Bullock, this action by the Mayor has already had the result of obstructing every city department in in the halting or cessation of work in many of them. As the salary appropriations amount to $100,000,000 and the debt service to $48,000,000, the ruling by the Mayor ties up or hinders the proper and economical expenditure of the remainder, or $100,000,000, it is asserted.

Mr. Bullock announces forthcoming reports revealing more serious facts in connection with the Mayor's administration.

Some persons who heard last night of Bullock's attack on the Mayor and of his promise to set forth further criticism of the city administration, concluded that this was a forerunner of a political break between Charles F. Murphy and Mayor Hylan because of the latter's alliance with William Randolph Hearst, and that the Tammany leader would line up with Governor Smith against them. But better informed leaders declared that the only ground for this was based on Bullock's close affiliation previously with Tammany Hall, and not to any change in the local political situation except in so far as it affected Bullock, who, they thought, had an "axe to grind."

A copy of Mr. Bullock's statement was taken to Mayor Hylan last night. After he had read some parts of it he said he had no comment to make.

SAYS CITY IS IN POOR HANDS

Citizens Union Finds Indications of Unfitness for Office.

The twenty-second annual report of the Citizens Union has this to say with regard to the present city government:

"What the Citizens Union said a year ago of the necessity of watching the new city administration has proved true. It was to be expected that new hands would do a certain amount of bungling in trying to run machinery with which they were unfamiliar. Some of the mistakes have been due to this lack of experience, but other acts can be attributed only to total unfitness for office.

"It was but natural that after years of government by officials who represented and for the most part attempted to put into practice an ideal of non-partisan service, an administration elected on a strictly partisan basis should inject elements of narrow partisanship into the city government. That expectation also has been fulfilled. It furnishes the best possible proof of the need of just such intelligent and alert watchfulness as the Citizens Union provides."

The report tells of wider participation of women in the union's affairs since their enfranchisement has made them eligible for full membership, and lists many well-known women who have affiliated with it.

CARE OF SHELL SHOCK CASES

Medical Department Profits by Britain's Experience with Them.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—In the treatment of soldiers returning from Europe the Army Medical Department will differentiate between the nervous or so-called "shell shock" cases and those of the insane or mentally affected, and will treat the two classes in separate institutions.

"The necessity of this policy was emphasized by the early experience in England," asserted Surgeon General Ireland of the army, "which, when plunged into the war, had no special preparation for the reception of the nervous and mental cases which were returned from France in such large numbers. These patients, unclassified and undistinguished, found their way to the insane asylums. The folly of this soon became apparent and was corrected, but the lesson was one which made a deep impression on the Medical Department of the United States Army when its turn came to organize methods for the distribution and treatment of patients of these two classes.

"The very first memorandum on this matter which took form in the office of the Surgeon General defined the absolute necessity of a sharp distinction between purely nervous and mental cases. This policy has been followed out strictly in France, where the evacuation and treatment hospital for the insane or so-called 'shell shock' cases are along quite different routes."

WANTS 500 YOUNG SAILORS.

Shipping Board Also Ready to Train 500 Mechanics for Sea Service.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The United States Shipping Board has issued a call for 500 American seamen of more than two years' experience on deep water and 500 mechanics with engineering experience. The board wants these men as soon as they can be obtained to train them for service as deck officers and engineers for the merchant marine.

The seamen will be trained in navigation at twenty-one free navigation schools maintained by the board. The mechanics will be trained in technical colleges or at the special marine engineering schools. Stationary and locomotive engineers, machinists who have worked on marine engines, and marine oilers and water tenders will be accepted for the engineering course. When the sailors have completed a six weeks' course of study and the engineers a month's course they will be examined for licenses as third mates and third engineers, respectively, and sent to sea.

PERSHING HONORS CORPORAL CLOSE

REWARDS PRIVATE SCHULTZ

Staten Islander's Act of Gallantry—Other Brave Americans Who Receive Decoration.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19. — General Pershing, as Commander in Chief, in the name of the President, has awarded the Distinguished Service Cross to the following named officers and soldiers for the acts of extraordinary heroism described after their names:

Sergt. Walter I. Barnhart, Co. I, 320th Infantry. (A. S. No. 1830737.) For extraordinary heroism in action near Bois d'en Dela, France, Sept. 27, 1918. Accompanied by an officer, Sergt. Barnhart advanced against an enemy machine-gun nest which was holding up the advance of his company. When they had reached a point within fifty yards of the gun, they were fired upon and the officer was severely wounded. Sergt. Barnhart immediately picked the officer up and through a hail of machine-gun bullets brought him to a position of safety. Home address, Mrs. W. J. Barnhart, wife, 402 Main Street, Latrobe, Penn.

Private Edward F. Morrissey, Company C, 302d Engineers. (A. S. No. 1710036.) For extraordinary heroism in action near Bazoches, France, August 25-26, 1918. Private Morrissey and another soldier had become separated from their detachment and were forced to take shelter for five and a half days. He rescued a wounded soldier from exposure to machine gun and shell fire and later attacked a machine-gun nest in his direct front. In the attack he killed two of the enemy with hand grenades and subsequently returned to our lines, assisting the wounded comrade to safety. Home address, James P. Morrissey, father, 41 Greenwood Place, Buffalo, N. Y.

Private Frank Schultz, Company C, 302d Engineers. (A. S. No. 2442333.) For extraordinary heroism in action near Bazoches, France, Aug. 25-26, 1918. Private Schultz and another soldier had become separated from their detachment and were forced to take shelter for five and a half days. He rescued a wounded comrade from exposure to machine-gun and shell fire and later attacked a machine-gun nest in his direct front. In the attack he killed two of the enemy with hand grenades and subsequently returned to our lines, assisting the wounded comrade to safety. Home address, Mrs. H. Schultz, mother, 1,025 Castleton Avenue, West New Brighton, Staten Island, N. Y.

First Lieut. Fred C. Davis, 108th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Ronssoy, France, Sept. 29-30, 1918. Lieutenant Davis successfully led a trench several hundred yards in advance of the Hindenburg line, under heavy shell and machine gun fire, with a detachment which he had organized with men from different organizations. The following morning he led his detachment still further, cleaning up about 500 yards of enemy trenches. Home address, John J. Davis, father, Madrid, Iowa.

Second Lieut. Kenneth Gow, (deceased,) Machine Gun Company, 107th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Ronssoy, France, Sept. 29, 1918. While supply officer for his company, Lieutenant Gow personally took rations forward with a pack mule through continuous shell and machine-gun fire. When all officers of his company were either killed or wounded, he assumed command and led it forward through heavy shell and machine-gun fire, until he was killed. Next of kin, Robert M. Gow, father, 12 Caldwell Avenue, Summit, N. J.

Corporal Kenneth M. McCann, Co. O, 102d Field Signal Battalion, (A. S. No. 1201050.)—For extraordinary heroism in action near Mount Kemmel, Belgium, Aug. 29-31, 1918. Corporal McCann, a signalman, worked continuously for seventy-two hours without relief through repeated gas bombardments. When the forward lines were cut by shell fire he personally directed the running of a new line under a heavy shell and machine gun fire. Home address, Mrs. Mary E. McCann, mother, 33 Beekman Place, New York City, N. Y.

Private Ira S. Parke, Machine Gun Company, 107th Infantry. (A. S. No. 403912.) For extraordinary heroism in action near Saint Souplet, France, Oct. 17, 1918. Private Parke, a machine gunner, although wounded three times during the crossing of the La Selle River and the capture of the heights beyond, refused to leave the field, and set a splendid example to his comrades. Home address, Rev. Harvey C. Parke, brother, 59 Main Street, Amherst, Mass.

Sergt. (First Class) Earnest E. Ely, Headquarters Co., 1st Brigade, Tank Corps. (A. S. No. 199423.)—For extraordinary heroism in action in the Aire Valley, France, Sept. 26 and Oct. 12, 1918. Sergt. Ely worked for five days and nights under intense shell fire to establish signal communications. While engaged in this work he was gassed and carried to a dressing station unconscious. On regaining consciousness he escaped from the dressing station, returned to his post, and continued to work for twelve hours more until he was gassed for a second time. Home address, Mrs. A. W. Ely, wife, Milwaukee, Ore.

Second Lieut. Edwin A. McCleur, Tank Corps—For extraordinary heroism in action near Jonville, France, Sept. 14, 1918. Commanding a reconnoissance control of three tanks, Lieutenant McCleur put to rout a company of German infantry, four pieces of artillery, and destroyed eight machine guns. His action was eight kilometers in advance of our front lines. For the following act of extraordinary heroism in action near Baisedemontvebeau, France, Sept. 28, 1918, a bar, to be worn with the Distinguished Service Cross, is awarded Lieutenant McCleur. In the attack on the woods, Lieutenant McCleur led his tank patrol on foot through dense wooded territory and in the face of intense fire. He was two kilometers in advance of the infantry front line during this exploit. Home address, E. B. McCleur, father, Bonair, Va.

Corporal Harry L. Close, Co. D, 106th Infantry. (A. S. No. 1207119.) For extraordinary heroism in action near Ronssoy, France, Sept. 27, 1918. During operations against the Hindenburg line, Corporal Close handled, attacked by a group of thirteen of the enemy. By hard fighting he succeeded in killing three and taking the remainder as prisoners, marching them to the rear under heavy fire of machine guns and shells. When returning he was separated from his detachment and were forced to take shelter for five and a half days. He rescued a wounded soldier from exposure to machine gun and shell fire and later attacked a machine-gun nest in his direct front. In the attack he killed two of the enemy with hand grenades and subsequently returned to our lines, assisting the wounded comrade to safety. Home address, Mrs. H. Corp John M. Crocker, Headquarters Company, 322d Field Artillery. (A. S. No. 1961691.) For extraordinary heroism in action near Verdun, France, Oct. 16 and 17, 1918. Maintaining a telephone line between infantry and artillery under a constant artillery barrage, Corporal Crocker's courage made possible the launching of artillery fire, which stopped enemy counterattacks. During the action he repaired thirty breaks, his line being so badly cut that he was obliged to use enemy wire for repairing. Because of the intensity of the fire, Corporal Crocker sent his men to a place of safety, remaining alone at the hazardous post. Home address, Mrs. Irene Crocker, mother, 12 North Street, Hamilton, Ohio.

Corp. Elvin L. Pierson, Headquarters Company, 322d Field Artillery. (A. S. No. 1951636.) For extraordinary heroism in action near Bois de la Grande Montagne, France, Oct. 16, 1918. When the telephone communications had been cut off Corporal Pierson made four trips as a runner through severe artillery barrage and machine gun fire, maintaining liaison between artillery and infantry. Home address, Mrs. Kathryn M. Pierson, wife, 2,229 Franklin Avenue, Toledo, Ohio.

Second Lieut. John Morrison, deceased, 322d Field Artillery. For extraordinary heroism in action near Bois de la Grande Montagne, France, Oct. 15, 1918. Charged with maintenance of a liaison between artillery and infantry, Lieut. Morrison accompanied the attacking infantry, making possible the prompt delivery of artillery fire, which repelled enemy counterattacks. His continued exposure to this hazardous duty resulted in his death. Next of kin, Hanley J. Morrison, father, 3,495 Brooklin Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Private Walter D. Mack, Co. B, 135th Machine Gun Battalion. (A. S. No. 2711175.)—For extraordinary heroism in action near Eyne, Belgium, Nov. 2, 1918. In the face of intense machine-gun fire, Private Mack voluntarily swam the Scheldt River to obtain information regarding the enemy. His successful return with the desired information enabled his company commander to so place his guns that they could be fired with great advantage. Home address, Mrs. M. L. Mack, mother, 2,121 North Twenty-second Street, Philadelphia, Penn.

Private John Warman, Co. B, 135th Machine Gun Battalion. (A. S. No. 1616244.)—For extraordinary heroism in action near Eyne, Belgium, Nov. 2, 1918. In the face of intense machine gun fire, Private Warman voluntarily swam the Scheldt River to obtain information regarding the enemy. His successful return with the desired information enabled his company commander to so place his guns that they could be fired with great advantage. Home address, Mrs. John Warman, wife, Sykerville, Penn.

Private Giuseppe Spadafora, Headquarters Company, 315th Infantry. (A. S. No. 1784205.) For extraordinary heroism in action near Montfaucon, France, Sept. 29, 1918. Private Spadafora was helping to remove a great many wounded men from a dressing station to a place of comparative safety when a heavy enemy bombardment began. He forced four German prisoners to assist him and repeatedly entered the heavily shelled area, bringing out wounded men. Home address, Mrs. R. Therin, mother, Molette, Province of Catania, Italy.

PLANS FLIGHT FROM SPAIN.

Semprini, Italian Aviator, May Try to Cross Atlantic.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Jan. 19.—The long delayed feat in aviation of crossing the Atlantic Ocean by airplane may be accomplished in the near future with a great new Caproni biplane, with the final stop in Atlantic City, the start to be made from the coast of Spain, with one stop at the Azores Islands.

Such is the plan outlined in a letter received today by Lieutenant Joseph Schwartz, Quartermaster Corps, U. S. A., from Frederic Semprini, who was chief instructor of the American pilots during the war at Milan, Italy. The communication was addressed to Lieutenant Schwartz's brother, Samuel Schwartz, who is now connected with the Purchasing Department of the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe, who discussed the undertaking while on a visit at Milan.

As chief pilot representing the Caproni Society in Italy, Semprini gained experience in the use of air machines which he now proposes to use in a flight across the Atlantic, and tells of the creation of the world's biggest triplane for the transportation of passengers, which has an enormous engine.

The plane has just been tested. It develops great speed and carries thirty-five to forty passengers. Another still larger plane is under construction which, it is said, will have a passenger-carrying limit of 100. According to the announcement, the attempt to cross the Atlantic will be made early this year, and unlike a number of flights similarly planned by American pilots, the flight will be made from east to west.

Also plans are said to be under way by members of Italian aviation interests for the development of a large aviation station and factory in the United States. Atlantic City will be considered in that connection.

CARUSO PLANS HOMEGOING.

Newark to Hear Tenor Last Before He Sails in May.

Newark, N. J., Jan. 19.—Enrico Caruso's last appearance in this country before his departure for Italy will be at the final concert of the Annual Newark Music Festival Association on May 19.

It was announced by C. Mortimer Wiske, director of the festival, that Mr. Caruso had obtained his passports last week to sail for Italy during the week of May 19.

Mr. Caruso will take his American bride to his estate near Florence, which he has not seen for two years, since this country went to war.

Salvation Army Campaign Plans.

A series of Evangelistic services, to be conducted by the Salvation Army, will begin with a great united meeting tonight, in Cavalry Methodist Episcopal Church, 129th St. and Seventh Av., at 7 o'clock.

In the course of these meetings there will be developed the plan of the Salvation Army vastly to extend its religious work, now that the war is ended, and the most able speakers from among the officers of that organization will be heard upon subjects most intimately affecting the future relationship of the army with the masses of the people.

Colonel William A. McEntyre, in charge of the Salvation Army's work in this city, will be in charge of the meetings, for Commander Evangeline Booth.

Mrs. Vincent Astor Gives $10,000.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 19.—Mrs. Vincent Astor has contributed $10,000 to the United War Work Fund of Dutchess County. The Astors, whose Summer home is at Ferncliff, Rhinebeck, have contributed liberally to all the war work of the county.

SHELTER 50,000 PEOPLE IN MESOPOTAMIA

British, by Canal, Also Open 300,000 Acres to Cultivation Near Bagdad.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—Thousands of refugees from Armenia and Eastern Syria were sheltered and fed by the British Army in Mesopotamia during the war, the work being of such a character that it has been made the subject of a special report issued here today. The statement follows:

"The future destiny of Armenian and Eastern Syrian peoples who have taken refuge with the British in Mesopotamia is one of the problems which the Peace Conference must consider. At present in the British refugee camp at Baqubas, thirty-three miles from Bagdad, the British are providing for 45,000 people of both races.

"The work of feeding, clothing, and housing these refugees, when the British were still at grips with the Turks not many miles away, was a triumph of organization. The sudden influx of some 50,000 people into regions already devastated by the ravages of war created a situation of utmost difficulty. The camp at Baqubas was hastily laid out, and in three weeks the refugees were taken in at a rate of 1,000 per day. Sickness was rife and all the refugees were in an emaciated condition.

"Providing clothing and food for these additional members, when so much transport was needed for operations along the Tigris River, was a marvelous achievement. Today the camp is organized as efficiently as many Western towns, the water supply and sanitation is perfect and three hospitals, all modernly equipped to meet medical requirements, are in operation. Nearly 1,000 orphans have been provided for and the whole population of the camp is beginning to recover from the horrors of their exodus from their native lands.

"To return them to the same state of insecurity in which they lived so long would be an international crime against these people.

"An important new irrigation project was opened on Jan. 10 at Mamureyah, on the Dialea River, some seventy miles northeast of Bagdad. Six months ago the British Irrigation Department commenced widening the channel of the river there.

"The new canal is six miles long, and, without further work on it, water can be supplied for the irrigation of 300,000 acres and render cultivation possible as far as the neighborhood of Bagdad.

"The opening ceremony was carried out in the presence of many Arab landowners, who hailed the completion of the work as striking evidence of the good intentions of the British. The increase in wealth to the land thus irrigated will certainly be considerable, and the increased production of food will be of great importance."

ADMIRAL SIMS CAUTIOUS.

In London Speech He Says Truth Gets Him Into Trouble.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—Vice Admiral William S. Sims and Herbert A. L. Fisher, Minister of Education, were among the guests at a dinner given today in connection with the American University Union in London.

Mr. Fisher, speaking as a member of the British Government, said he would like to express the profound debt which the United States and the British people felt they owed to the United States for the part that country had taken in the war. There had been very anxious times last Spring, he said, but there was not a single moment of the darkest days when there was a member of the Government who was not confident that the Allies would come through successfully. But they were very anxious moments, he declared, and the British Government waited longingly for the time for the words "The Americans are coming."

One morning, Mr. Fisher continued, he heard the Prime Minister say in a quiet voice to the Shipping Controller, "I have got more ships than men to man them." Then, added Mr. Fisher, "I knew it was all right."

Cheering greeted the words of Mr. Fisher.

Vice Admiral Sims in a brief speech said he hesitated about telling the truth, because telling the truth got him into more trouble than anything else. The average American, he added, was all right, and if not, he did not have to be told about it.

EXPEL METZ UNDESIRABLES.

French Have Relieved German Professors in Secondary Schools.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—The purification of Metz from German undesirable elements continues under the best conditions, according to a Havas News Agency dispatch from that city.

The latest convoy sent out from Metz included Professor Haenlein of the Royal College faculty. He has been a strong pan-Germanist and was a Director in many German societies.

All the professors of German nationality who had hitherto remained in their posts in the secondary schools have been relieved of their functions.

A man should never do the work that a machine can do for him

During the war thousands of merchants learned the value of using labor-saving cash registers. Other thousands have yet to find out that it pays to do things quickly by machinery instead of slowly by hand.

While merchants were learning this great lesson of the war we were just as busy investigating, with the result that we have gathered together many new ideas that will help merchants make more money.

We want all merchants to know and benefit from these new ideas. For this reason we recently called our Eastern Sales Force together in a big convention in New York City.

Over 250 of our agents and salesmen got together. They had a fine educational program. They discussed new store methods, and exchanged the new ideas we have been so busy gathering during the past year.

These ideas can be of great profit to you, and you owe it to your business to call on our representatives as soon as they get back home.

Our agents and salesmen are better informed, and therefore can be of greater service to you than ever before. So get in touch with them as soon as you can, and let them tell you what they have learned. Do it now.

Red Tape Doesn't Make Method—in Filing

The function of files is to place records from the last user, where they will be instantly available for the next user.

Overelaborated methods of indexing which keep records out of action between filings don't do this.

Amberg Indexes being based on the proven percentages with which names occur in the correspondence of any business require no complex schemes to prevent error.

The Amberg Way—is to simplify files by bringing them back to filing principles, those fundamental laws that are lost sight of in most businesses.

An Amberg Analysis

will tell you if your files are too arbitrarily organized for prompt action, what filing laws should be applied to make your file-plan a center of impulse for your records and not merely a resting place for dead records.

Carnegie Hall

January 21st

Like the burst of a fiery comet came Toscha Seidel's brilliant debut in Carnegie Hall last spring. Virile, passionate, volcanic, this young Russian plays with an unbridled ardor. His tone control ranges from the most compelling and inspiring fortissimo to the almost inconceivably delicate shadowing of sound. He is a consummate master of technique, a pupil of the great Auer—a genius of astonishing versatility.

4,500 TROOPS BACK ON SHIPS IN PORT

WOMEN NURSES RETURN

Captain Says He Has Proof That Germans Used Their Dead to Get Fats.

Two American transports, the Willehmina and the Sierra, and the British liner Lapland arrived yesterday from France with 4,500 troops, and the United States Hospital ship Comfort also arrived, bringing seven officers and 231 enlisted men sick and wounded. The police boat Patrol went down the bay to meet the returning soldiers and escorted the vessels to the piers in Hoboken, with the exception of the Lapland, which docked in Manhattan at the White Star Pier 61, foot of West Twentieth Street.

The Comfort, which arrived first, left Plymouth Jan 5, and put into Punta del Garda in the Azores on Jan. 10 to give the patients a little rest from the tossing about in the head seas. Forty-two men from the Naval Hospital there were transferred to the Comfort.

Confirmation of the story that the Germans boiled down the bodies of their dead from the battlefield to get fat was brought by Captain Robert W. Hudgens of the 16th Infantry of Lawrence, Va., who received fourteen shrapnel wounds on Oct. 9. "It was at Bellecourt," the captain said, "that I had ocular proof that this terrible thing we had been hearing was true. We found caldrons in a tunnel filled with portions of human bodies, and there was a heap of bones in a corner which were used, we were told, for fertilizer. At one place under Bellecourt there was a chopping block with a cleaver and evidences of what it had been used for in the caldron beside it."

One of the wounded soldiers was John F. Perry of Wood Haven, L. I., with Company B, 106th Infantry, who was shot in both legs at St. Quentin on Sept. 29, and lay in a shell hole for forty-eight hours, during which blood poisoning set in. When the Germans found him they took him to a hospital and took off his right leg and three weeks later, he said, the other foot had to be amputated. The conditions in the hospital were something awful, Perry stated, and he had no change of linen nor was he washed for two months. When the British captured the town he was taken to one of their hospitals and treated with the greatest kindness.

There were about fifty soldiers on the comfort who had lost arms or legs in the fighting on the western front, and the walked about the deck on crutches, or with their arms in slings, and all appeared contented with their lot and were looking forward to re-entering civil life.

Joseph A. Ashi of Company E, 108th Infantry, lost his right leg and hand through being hit with a shell at Belleau Wood on Sept. 29, and said he was going back to Phoebus, Va., to resume his law practice.

A. Tobin of Austin, Texas, who was a boiler maker on the U. S. S. Olympic, had both of his arms smashed by the Bolsheviki in the fighting beyond Archangel. He said that the enemy looted banks and every building where there was anything valuable, and even cut off the hair of all the girls. The Bolsheviki issued paper money, he added, which was so cheap that a man had to take a sack full to buy a packet of cigarettes.

There were three naval nurses on the Comfort, including Miss Marie Smith of Berkeley, Cal., who was wounded by shrapnel in the left foot at Château-Thierry while serving at a dressing station where the big naval guns were in action.

Two of the passengers on the Sierra were the distinguished service crosses. Reuben C. Hamilton, Union, S. C., was awarded for heroism in the St. Mihiel drive on Sept. 20 and 21. Major Hamilton, who was attached to the Ambulance Service, 26th Sanitary Train, established and maintained an ambulance dressing station in an advanced and exposed position, where he labored continually, treating the wounded in full view of the enemy.

The other who won the Distinguished Service Cross was Corporal Henry W. Willard, 7th Infantry. Willard, who previously had been a farmer near Utica, N. Y., was on sniping duty in Belleau Wood, June 15 last. One at a time he killed seven German machine gunners who crept into the enemy lines, captured the guns and returned to his own party with it on his back. He explained that the German was like an animal which always expected you to come from the same place. Consequently, he said, sniping was comparatively easy.

Colonel Charles B. Winn, a regular, of New York, an officer in the 306th Field Artillery, 77th Division, has on his left arm the unique insignia of a gold statue of Liberty, on a field of blue. He stated it was the latest insignia for the boys of the 77th Division.

Lieutenant Fred Siter of Passaic, N. J., of the 91st Aero Squadron, has downed five Fokker machines. On Nov. 4, at an altitude of 4,900 metres, he and two others engaged fifteen enemy machines and downed one. Later they met five more and downed two, making three in one day for which he has been officially cited. In October they encountered some German light cruiser machines, sailed them, and he and Lieutenant Heman both received the D. S. C. for brilliant work on that occasion.

PERSHING SELECTS OFFICERS FOR HONORS

Ten Major Generals, 12 Brigadiers, and a Colonel Who Get Distinguished Service Medals.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Ten Major Generals, twelve Brigadier Generals and one Colonel have been selected by General Pershing for Distinguished Service Medals for their work in connection with the creation of the American Army in France and its successful assault on the German lines. The citations were made public today by the War Department.

One of the Major Generals, Charles T. Menoher, Commander of the 42d (Rainbow) Division, now Director of the Air Service, was decorated yesterday by Secretary Baker. General Pershing's citation of this officer showed that the division participated in practically all of the important engagements of the American Army, and it said that "the reputation as a fighting unit of the 42d Division is in no small measure due to the soldierly qualities and military leadership of this officer."

The other Major Generals to be decorated are:

ALLEN, HENRY T., 90th Division.
CRONKHITE, ADELBERT P., 80th Division.
HAAN, WILLIAM G., 32d Division.
HINES, JOHN L., successively Regimental, Brigade, Division and Corps Commander.
KERNAN, FRANCIS J., organizer of the Overseas Service of Supply and member of the Supreme War Council.
MUIR, CHARLES H., 28th Division.
READ, GEORGE W., 50th Division.
SUMMERALL, CHARLES P., 1st Division and Fifth Army Corps.
WRIGHT, WILLIAM M., successively Commander of the 57th Division, the Third, Fifth and Seventh Army Corps and the 89th Division.

The Brigadier Generals decorated are:

ANDREWS, AVERY D., Assistant Chief of Staff in charge of transportation.
BROWN, PRESTON, Chief of Staff of the 2d Division, and later Commander of the 3d Division.
CONNER, FOX, Assistant Chief of Staff in charge of equipment.
CONNER, WILLIAM, Assistant Chief of Staff of the A. E. F., and later Chief of Staff of the Service of Supply.
FISKE, HAROLD B., chief of training section, General Staff, A. E. F.
HAGOOD, JOHNSON, organizer of training system in France.
M'COY, FRANK R., Secretary General Staff, A. E. F., and subsequently Commander of the 63d Infantry Brigade.
MALONE, PAUL B., Brigade Commander during major operations.
NOLAN, DENNIS E., Chief of Intelligence, A. E. F.
SMITH, HARRY A., Commandant of army schools at Langres, France, and Civil Administrator in occupied German territory.

The Colonel named is John McA. Palmer, who was on the General Staff, and later commanded the 58th Infantry Brigade north of Verdun.

SEES SOCIALISM GROWING.

Rev. A. I. Dushaw Tells Congregation It Is Stronger Than in 1918.

The Rev. Amos I. Dushaw, pastor of the Kent Reformed Church, Kent Street and Manhattan Avenue, Greenpoint, L. I., preaching last night on the subject "Was Christ a Socialist?," said that the majority of Socialists in the United States had been loyal and that Socialists in France, England, and Italy had generally been a source of strength to the Allies. The Socialists of Germany, on the other hand, he added, were the only element in that country from which the slightest opposition came to autocracy and militarism.

The preacher asserted that, in spite of seeming setbacks, socialism was stronger today as a world force than it had been in 1918. He said that Socialists were wrong in generally condemning the Church, and that they should change their policy by co-operating with progressive churchgoers. He did not undertake to answer his question whether the Socialists could claim Christ, but asserted that the mistakes of Christian churches were responsible for the belief of Socialists that they were better followers of Christ than the Christians were.

FOR RELIGIOUS DEMOCRACY.

Dr. Manning Says Church Should Be Centre of Human Fellowship.

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church in this city, preached a short sermon last night in St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church in Flushing. He said that democracy would be made safe for itself and the world only when it was developed in the fellowship of Jesus Christ.

"We who believe in Him must see to it that democracy is developed and does not stand still, and that it is developed in His fellowship," said Dr. Manning. Speaking of Bolshevism, Dr. Manning said: "We must not only use force to suppress Bolshevism, but we must follow the teachings of Jesus Christ. That is the reason I am so much interested in free pews. The Church should be the most democratic place on earth—the centre of human fellowship."

Mr. Manning then announced that the Vestry of Trinity Church yesterday morning had unanimously adopted his "free pew" plan.

Only 68 Casualties in Today's Army List

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The War Department gave out one casualty list today, containing only 68 names, bringing the total for the army, after an official recheck, up to 211,422. No Marine Corps casualty list was issued, but the total previously announced for that arm was 5,701. The total for army and Marine Corps is now 217,123.

The army list issued today contained the names of 11 killed in action, 10 died of wounds, 7 died of accident, and 40 died of disease.

HONOR MONTCLAIR OFFICER.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Jan. 19.—Lieutenant Ridge G. Curtis of Montclair has received a decoration from the British Government for bringing in a wounded man under fire at the battle of Bethune.

Curtis fought in many battles. He enlisted in a London regiment, the Rangers, and after several months' active service on the British front was discharged as unfit for service. He was a Lance Corporal at the time. In April, 1917, he enlisted in the 11th United States Engineers, and in July of that year went to France. He earned his promotion to Lieutenant in the field.

Lieutenant Curtis was in battles at Cambrai, Arras, Bethune, Château-Thierry, St. Mihiel, and the Argonne. While looking for a German position last March he was lost in No Man's Land, but after considerable hardship found his way back to the lines.

Beth Israel Hospital Directors.

These men were elected yesterday to the Board of Directors of Beth Israel Hospital: J. D. Cohen, I. Gillman, W. P. Goldman, A. Krieger, I. Krieger, Samuel Lubell, H. B. Rubin, and Jacob Sperber. The institution is about to erect a new building at Livingston Place and Sixteenth Street adjoining its present site. It will cost about $1,500,000.

CAPT. J. NORMAN HALL OUT OF PRISON CAMP

Famous American Flier Who Was Captured Last May Has Returned to France.

135 OTHERS SET FREE

Axel Anderson of Steamer Winslow Which Was Sunk by the Raider Wolf, Among Those Liberated.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Captain James Norman Hall of Colfax, Iowa, a member of the Lafayette Escadrille and later attached to the American air forces in France, who was driven down wounded behind the German lines last May, has returned to France from Germany. His name and those of 135 other American prisoners of war who have been released were contained in a list made public today by the War Department.

Others released included Axel L. Anderson of Sweden, First Officer of the American steamship Winslow, which was sunk by the German raider Wolf. In the list also were the names of two civilians, Christie Keppler, whose address was not given, and Howard Warren of Myerville, Md.

The names of the military prisoners follow:

OPPOSE RED FLAG.

New Jersey Mechanics Frame Bill Barring Emblem.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Jan. 19.—The New Jersey Junior Order of United American Mechanics has framed a bill to bar the red flag or any other emblem fostering Bolshevism. It will be introduced at the present session of the Legislature by Senator James Hammond of Mercer County. A committee of the New Jersey order has asked that every State in the Union have such a bill introduced. The text of the act reads:

"Any person, who shall in public or private display a red flag, a black flag, or any ensign or sign bearing an inscription opposed to organized government, or the flag, emblem, or insignia of any organization, society or order opposed to organized government, for the purpose of inciting, promoting, or encouraging hostility or opposition to or to the subversion or destruction of any and all government, shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor and punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 or imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding fifteen years, or both."

The Steck
SMALL GRAND PIANO

THE STECK is one of the three great American pianos, the universal demand for which has been so great as to make it necessary to manufacture them both in America and Europe. The other two are the Steinway and the Weber. The international fame of the Steck has been won through sheer merit. The result of the painstaking effort of George Steck, musician and master craftsman, the instrument has made and maintained a reputation that is second to none in piano history.

The Steck possesses a wonderful tone—pure, liquid and exquisitely rounded and a delightfully flexible, responsive action. These features, together with its unexcelled durability, combine to make the Steck without question the greatest piano at its price, obtainable today.

The instrument illustrated is but five feet in length, yet powerful and resonant in tone. A veritable "Grand Piano" in every sense of the word.

The Steck Piano is obtainable in three styles. The Steck Upright, at $550. The Steck Small Grand, at $800. The Steck Louis XV Grand, at $950. Convenient Monthly Payments if Desired.

GIANTS AND DODGERS PLAN TRADES TO STRENGTHEN TEAMS FOR PENNANT RACE

The Woolsack is a standing symbol of the place held by wool in the industrial, economic and social evolution of the English people.

It's a Woolsack on which the Lord Chancellor sits in the House of Lords.

Folks engaged in the same occupation for centuries, handing their skill down from generation to generation, are just naturally bound to produce a prize product.

It's our importations, along with America's best, that lets us refer to our suits and overcoats for men and boys as "the world's best woolens."

CINCINNATI REDS MAY GET DAUBERT

Herrmann Will Give Kopf and Another Player for Brooklyn First Baseman.

MUST WITHDRAW SUIT

Manager McGraw Has Plans Ready for a Four-Cornered Deal to Strengthen the Giants.

The stage is all set for a big baseball deal, whereby Jake Daubert, the Brooklyn first baseman, will go to the Cincinnati Reds for Bill Kopf, the speedy shortstop, and another player. President Charles H. Ebbets of the Dodgers admitted last night that the deal was under way. He said, however, that nothing definite would be done until Daubert had withdrawn the suit which he now has against the Brooklyn club. It is understood that as soon as Daubert withdraws his suit the papers in the trade will be signed.

Daubert had made it known to his friends that it is his purpose to press the suit against the Dodgers unless they make a favorable settlement. It is the only case of its kind resulting from the short season ordered by the War Department. He wants his salary from the time the season ended, on Sept. 2, to Oct. 15, the time designated in his contract.

Manager Wilbert Robinson is already making plans to supplant Daubert at first, and Jake's successor may be Ray Schmandt or Clarence Mitchell, the pitcher. If Mitchell, who is a first-rate batsman, makes good at first on the Southern trip, Schmandt will play second base and Kopf will play shortstop. The shortstop position has been a source of worry to Manager Robinson for several seasons, but Kopf should fill the bill.

Manager McGraw of the Giants was one of the busiest men at the conferences last week, and it is stated that he is engineering a deal which will involve four clubs. With Daubert going to the Reds, it is certain that August Herrmann does not want Hal Chase even if he is successful in refuting the charges which were made against him by Manager Christy Mathewson. It is not likely that Chase will come to the Giants, as the testimony of McGraw and Pitcher Pol Perritt of the Giants is involved in the controversy between Chase and the Cincinnati club.

The Giants would like to get one of the St. Louis pitchers, Lee Meadows if possible, but President Rickey last week refused to let Meadows go. Manager George Stallings wants to get outfielder Casey Stengel for the Braves, and that part of the trade is now pending. As the major leagues have evidently agreed to taboo big money transactions in negotiating for players, it is believed that Manager McGraw is trying to arrange a four-cornered transaction between the Giants, Boston Braves, Pittsburgh, and St. Louis.

President Rickey stated Saturday night that one of the biggest deals of the season was in the wind, and this is the one to which he referred. The managers of these clubs talked for several hours at the Waldorf Saturday night, and the coming week may see the deal consummated.

John H. Farrell, Secretary of the minor leagues, held a long conference yesterday with President Ban Johnson, but the American League leader would not sign the agreement which was drawn up between the minors and majors in regard to territorial rights, reservations, and contracts. Chairman Herrmann of the National Commission signed the document on Saturday, but Johnson said that he would not sign it until he had held further conferences with Herrmann and President Heydler of the National League.

Johnson's refusal to sign yesterday would indicate that there is some hitch in the negotiations. As the National agreement between the two organizations will operate until the new one is signed, it is said that the hitch is over the cases now in controversy. There are numerous cases which will have to be settled and it is the disposition of these which is holding up the complete dissolution of the two bodies.

While only nine minor leagues were in operation for part of last season, it is understood that the minors demand recognition of the territorial rights of sixteen leagues. The attitude of the National Commission on the territory of leagues which went out of business is that they should be permitted to come under the jurisdiction of the National Commission if they chose.

This would indicate that the commission expects to build up a minor league circuit of its own if the opportunity should present itself. The major leaguers do not believe that the new independent arrangement which the minors have built up for themselves will be successful. They point out that through the draft the minors were certain of a large amount of money each season.

The minors expect to set their own prices on ball players which they hope to sell to the majors in the future, but it is doubtful if the standard price will be as high as that which came under the draft. The major leagues learned last season that they could sign all the young ball players they needed without the aid of the minors and they can also take advantage of the field of school and college ball players, if it is necessary.

MAYO SETS NEW RECORD.

Betters His Own Time Over Brooklyn Course.

Eddie Mayo of the Brooklyn A. A. ran his best race of the season yesterday in the handicap road race of the Long Island Athletic League, held over a course of about four miles under the auspices of the Brooklyn A. A. Mayo started from scratch and finished eighth in 21:38, twenty seconds faster than the record for the course, held jointly by Mayo and Louis Kaufman, when they ran a dead heat three weeks ago. Mayo's effort gave him the fast time prize.

The winner was Hughie Carroll of the Brooklyn A. A., who was competing for the first time in three years. Carroll, getting away with starters who had four minutes handicap, pulled away from his rivals after about a half mile had been covered, and thereafter was always in front. Carroll was not extended, and at the finish had an advantage of nearly 300 yards on R. Jekel, his closest rival. The victor's time was 23:38. Twenty-two harriers started, and all finished.

The team prize went to the representatives of the Brooklyn A. A., who gathered the low total of 21 points against 34 for the Kings County A. A. athletes.

The order of finish:

SPURT WINS FOR KATZ.

He Defeats Field of Six In Handicap Road Race.

By a margin of about five yards N. Katz landed first place yesterday in the opening handicap road race of the Yorkville Athletic League, held over the Ninety-second Street Y. M. H. A. course of about four miles. A field of six starters participated in the chase.

Katz, competing for the Ninety-second Street Y. M. H. A., had an allowance of two minutes. He made his bid for the chief prize and was successful after a nip and tuck struggle with L. Bass, Hungarian-American A. C. At the time Katz spurted, Bass and Sam Frierich, Ninety-second Street Y. M. H. A., the scratch starter, were plodding along at the head of the small field.

Frierich was unequal to the task of following the stiff pace set by Katz in the latter's final effort to the tape. Frierich, however, carried off the fast time honors. His time was 16:06. Katz's winning time was 17:04.

The order of finish:

Pos.	Name and club.	Hand'p.	Actual Time.
1—N.	Katz, 92d St. Y. M. H. A.	2:00	17:04

TWO POLO MATCHES GO EXTRA PERIODS

Meadowlark and Royal Air Force Trios Win in Victory Cup Tournament.

STANDING OF THE TEAMS.	Won.	Lost.	P. C.
Royal A. F.	4	0	1000
White Owls	3	0	1000
Squadron A	1	2	.333
Meadowlarks	1	2	.333
Rovers	0	2	.000
Foxhunters	0	3	.000

Expert horsemanship and clever stickwork gave the Meadowlarks and Royal Air Force polo teams victories yesterday in the Victory Cup tournament at Durland's Riding Academy. The Meadowlarks trio defeated Squadron A by a count of 10 goals to 9, while the Royal Air Force pololats scored over the Foxhunters by a margin of 12 to 9. Both matches went to extra five-minute periods before a decision was reached. The Royal Air Force success kept the team tied with the White Owls in the battle for leading position in the standing. This tie will be decided Wednesday night.

Dr. Blackwell, playing back for the Meadowlarks, gave his team victory in the extra period with a brilliant and true smash on a difficult goal. The tally came when the teams had struggled through four minutes without effect. The victorious trio conceded a handicap of six goals to its rivals, and for a time it appeared that this allotment would cause the downfall of the Meadowlarks.

To their handicap the Squadron A players added two goals in the first period, and led at the call of time by 8 to 4. In the second period Dr. Blackwell's stick became effective, and with a concentrated attack the Meadowlarks managed to pull up on even terms at the end of the second period. The score was 9 goals for each team.

In the extra period the Meadowlarks outrode their rivals, but were unable to register a goal until Dr. Blackwell's timely score within one minute of the finish.

The Royal Air Force trio encountered strong opposition from the Foxhunters. The latter aggregation had a four-goal handicap, and at the end of the first period had a comfortable lead, at 7 goals to 2. In the second period, however, the offensive efforts of the Canadian players increased and the Foxhunters were almost swept aside with the R. A. F. attack. Led by Archie Kinney, at No. 2, the Canadians registered seven goals for this period while the Foxhunters were collecting two. The finish found the teams tied at nine goals apiece.

Kinney returned to the attack in the extra period, and his expert riding and well-calculated use of the stick resulted in two goals. Baker also scored in this session.

TRICK DEFEATS BIG FIELD.

Spurt in Last Quarter Wins Paulist A. C. Road Race.

E. Trick led home a field of eighteen rival members of the Paulist A. C. yesterday in a members' handicap road race over a course of about three and one-half miles. Trick took the lead from George Kirkwood in the last quarter mile of the journey and sprinted to an advantage of about 100 yards at the finish line. The victor started with a handicap allowance of two minutes and thirty seconds. His actual time was 20:09.

Kirkwood, after being passed by Trick, weakened in the final stages of the race and had to be content with third laurels. Second place went to V. Hand. J. Costello, who only recently returned to competition, started from scratch and won the fast-time prize. Costello finished eighth after a decidedly interesting race, in 19:02. Captain Craig Richards, Engineer Corps, U. S. A., who recently returned from France, finished fourth. The veteran ran in good style.

The order of finish:

E. Trick, (2:30.) 20:09; V. Hand, (1:45.) 19:29; G. Kirkwood, (2:30.) 20:12; Captain Craig Richards, U. S. A., (3:30.) 20:45; P. Lavery, (0:45.) 19:05; A. Larson, (1:30.) 19:50; P. Dunne, (2:15.) 20:53; J. Costello, (scratch.) 19:02; W. Schippel, (1:45.) 20:50; N. Florin, (3:15.) 22:50.

MAKES HIS OWN PACE.

Trivoulidas Leads All the Way in Morningside Race.

Peter Trivoulidas of the Morningside A. C. scored an easy victory yesterday in the club's invitation road race over a course of about four and one-half miles. Trivoulidas, getting away at the head of a field of five runners, led all the way and made the pace to his own liking. At the finish he had an advantage of about 250 yards on Thomas Harris, St. Christopher Club. Trivoulidas's time was 26:40.

The order of finish:

P. Trivoulidas, Morningside A. C., 26:40; Thomas Harris, St. Christopher Club, 27:30; George Thompson, St. Christopher Club, 27:50; C. Hunter, St. Christopher Club, 28:10; O. S. Weeks, Hollywood Inn A. A., 28:20.

Schaefer Defeats Cochran.

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—Jake Schaefer defeated Welker Cochran tonight in the final block of their 3,600-point balk line billiard match, 300 to 295, making the match by a total score of 3,600 to 3,100. Schaefer made his high run of the meet last night, 307, equalling the record made by Cochran. Schaefer and Cochran open another 3,600-point match Monday in New York.

Three After Pool Title.

The players are so well matched in the pocket billiard tournament of the American Amateur Billiard Association, now in progress at Doyle's Broadway Academy, that three players still have a chance of winning. Edward J. Kirby holds the lead with three straight victories. George Barton has won three and lost one, while Charles Fulton has won twice and lost once. Kirby still has Howe and Barton to play, and as they are both strong match players his lead is by no means safe. Tonight's game will bring together Kirby and Howe.

700 Teams to Bowl.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Jan. 19.—There will be more than 700 teams in the nineteenth annual convention of the American Bowling Congress to be held here in March, according to A. L. Langtry, Secretary, at a meeting held here this afternoon. Mr. Langtry reported that 100 teams were coming from Chicago, 200 had been entered from Toledo, twenty-five from Buffalo, twenty-five from St. Louis, and thirty-two from Detroit. The tournament will begin on March 8, the first four or five days being given over to local teams.

KNIGHT WINS AT TRAPS.

Takes High Scratch Prize at Travers Island.

Although the light was satisfactory and there was not much wind to change the flight of the blue rocks, the scores made in the weekend shoot of the New York Athletic Club at Travers Island, yesterday did not come up to the average. H. D. Knight, winner of the high scratch prize, was an exception. He managed to take the cup with the excellent total of 95 out of a possible 100 targets.

After a shootoff, the high handicap prize went to F. J. Ham. A special of 25 "birds" was won by W. G. Allen. In the regular fixtures, legs were scored by the gunners who had full scores. In the shoot for the Red Cross and Accumulation prizes, which are shot off together, the legs were won by W. B. Ogden, A. P. Bennett, G. J. Corbett, C. W. Stevens, G. S. McCutcheon, R. M. Owen, and H. B. Knight.

The Tournament Cup winners were W. B. Odgen, J. I. D. Bristol, C. W. Stevens, F. J. Ham, G. S. McCutcheon, E. D. Anderson, W. Bauer, D. L. Bradley, and H. D. Knight. The legs on the Byronel Cup, which is at 50 targets, were won by C. W. Stevens, F. J. Ham, J. C. Newington, E. D. Anderson, W. Bauer, W. G. Allen, and R. B. Cole. Twenty-eight nimrods took part in the shoot.

BOAK WINS MOHAWK RUN.

He Outlasts Rivals in Final Dash for Wire.

A sprint in the last half mile of the journey gave William Boak, of the Mohawk A. C., premier prize yesterday in the Mohawk A. C. members' handicap road race, held over the club's Elks course in the Bronx. The distance was about four and one-half miles. Boak started with a handicap of two minutes. When about half a mile from the finish he overtook E. Hill, who was allotted the limit start, three minutes. Then followed a hard sprint, which ended with Hill weakening and falling back, while Boak continued at an even gait and worked up an advantage of about 200 yards.

Boak's time was 24:50. Eleven members participated in the chase. J. McGuinness was the scratch starter. He returned the fastest time, finishing fifth in 24:14.

The order of finish:

W. Boak, (2:00.) 24:50; H. Hill, (2:00.) 26:28; W. Franz, (2:00.) 26:34; J. [illegible] Hine, (2:00.) 27:11; J. McGuinness (scratch.) 24:14; J. P. Brook, (1:40.) 25:18; E. URGES INCOME TAX BE COMPUTED NOW

Collector Edwards Says Returns on Small Salaries Will Not Change.

EXPLAINS WORKING OF LAW

Expects at Least 1,000,000 New Taxpayers Under Bill Now Before Congress.

Internal Revenue Collector William H. Edwards said in a statement to the public yesterday that single persons who have earned $1,000 or more and married men who have earned $2,000 may just as well begin now to make up their accounts for the year 1918, because the Income tax bill before Congress is practically in its final shape and taxes on small incomes are not likely to be affected by any further changes.

Under the law to be enacted, 1,000,000 persons will pay an income tax this year for the first time, according to Collector Edwards. Most of these millions, he says, have not been forced to make a study previously of income tax questions, and he points out that it is necessary for all men and women who are put by Congress into the income-paying class to study thoroughly their obligation under the law and their financial position.

"The income tax payer must ascertain accurately his gross income from all sources," Mr. Edwards adds. "There is his salary or wages, including overtime pay and any bonus received as additional compensation, and a married man having children under 18 years who are working should include the earnings of such children.

If he sold any property at a profit the gain must be computed and included in gross income. If he rented any property to other persons the total rents received in the year must be ascertained and from that figure a deduction may be taken for taxes paid on rented property, the necessary minor repairs, fire insurance, any interest he may have paid on mortgage, and a reasonable allowance for annual wear and tear of the rented property. The balance is included in gross income for the year.

"Interest on bank deposits, whether withdrawn or added to his bank balances, must be included in all calculations of income, bond interest received during the year must also be included, except interest on municipal, county or State bonds. Interest on United States bonds need not be included by the ordinary bondholder who purchased small amounts. Holders of large amounts of Liberty bonds, however, should ask their bankers to write to my office for the rule applying to tax on such interest.

"Depreciation on property used in a profession, in business, or in farming is another item that may be claimed as a deduction. The storekeeper may claim depreciation on his fixtures, and on his delivery horses and wagons, but not on his stock held for sale. The professional man may claim similar deduction on his instruments and, in the case of a physician who maintains a team or auto for making his calls on patients, reasonable depreciation may be claimed. The farmer may claim depreciation on his farm buildings, aside from his personal residence, also on his farm machinery, his work horses, and farm work wagons. The theory of depreciation, in connection with the income tax, is that wear and tear caused by use in earning income is a real expense in the earning of that income.

"Dividends on stock shares are income and must be included in the gross figures, although the law does not impose the normal tax on distributions made by domestic corporations.

Profit on Merchandise.

"A person buying and selling merchandise must find his profits for the year on the following basis: First, ascertain the gross sales or total cash receipts, then add together the inventory at the beginning of the year and the purchase of goods for resale; from this latter sum subtract the inventory of goods on hand at the year's end, and the result is the cost of goods sold. This cost, plus necessary expenses incurred solely through the conduct of the business, is to be deducted from the gross sales, and the result is the net earnings of the business.

"Everybody wants to know what income is exempt from tax. Very few items that fall to the average man may be legally disregarded in figuring up his 1918 income. Gifts and bequests can be eliminated, also proceeds of life insurance received by the beneficiary of an insured person. A person who cashed in an endowment policy need report as income only that portion which exceeds the total of the premiums he paid in all years on that policy. Annuities are not taxable, unless the person received in the year payments which represent when added to all prior payments on the annuity, an amount greater than the original cost of the annuity. Dividends from policies must be considered income. Alimony is not income to the recipient, nor is it an allowable deduction on the part of the person who pays.

"From the total of all items of income there are certain deductions allowable by law. All interest paid on personal indebtedness and all taxes paid during the year are deductable, except Federal income and excess profits taxes, inheritance taxes, and assessments for local improvements, such as sidewalks, sewers, &c. Losses incurred in business or trade are allowable, also losses arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, in cases where such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise. Losses incurred outside of a person's regular business are allowable to the extent of gains reported from similar transactions within the year. Debts due to the taxpayer actually ascertained to be worthless during the year are deductible.

"A professional man arrives at his professional income by ascertaining the total of fees for services and deducting therefrom all expenses connected directly and solely with his practice.

To Determine Farmer's Income.

"A farmer must figure up all income derived from the sale or exchange of products during the year, whether such produce was raised on the farm or purchased and resold. He is allowed to deduct from this total his expenses of the year connected with the planting, cultivation, harvesting and marketing of the crop, or the care, feeding and marketing of live stock. He is not allowed to deduct the amount expended in 1918 in purchasing stock for resale, but when such stock is sold its cost is to be deducted from sale price in ascertaining the gain to be included in his return. The cost price of stock bought prior to 1917 cannot be deducted, as in the case just cited, if such cost was included in the deduction made in the year of purchase.

"Contributions or gifts actually made in 1918 to organizations operating exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific or educational purposes, and to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, may be deducted to an amount not exceeding 15 per cent. of the net income computed without the benefit of this deduction.

"After the total of all income is found and the deductions allowable by law have been computed as an offset, the amount of income in excess of such deductions is the net income, which forms the basis of the assessment of tax.

"If every person in this district will examine his own 1918 income and his allowable deductions, in line with data that I have given, he will know beyond doubt whether he must file his return when the blanks arrive, and here is how he will determine his liability to file a return. If he is single he must file, if his net income was $1,000 or more, and this requirement is enforced whether or not he is the head of a family. If he is married he must file his return if his net income including that of his wife and minor children, was $2,000 or more."

THE SCREEN

"The Fighting Roosevelts," a moving picture based on incidents in the life of Colonel Roosevelt, who authorized its production by McClure Pictures, Inc., is the leading attraction at the Strand this week. The film is not, and, of course, could not be, a "life" of the Colonel, for only a few of the many important acts and activities of the late ex-President's life can be pictured in the limited number of reels suitable for a single program. Charles Hanson Towne and Porter Emerson Browne, who prepared the scenario, simply selected familiar episodes from Colonel Roosevelt's career, and William Nigh, the director, put them into vivid pictures.

The principal scenes are of the Colonel as a child, a young man in the State Assembly, a cowboy, Police Commissioner, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Lieutenant Colonel of the Rough Riders, and President. These scenes have been staged, with intimate and personal touches, in frank Horatio Alger fashion. There has been no attempt at analysis or delineation of character in them, and those adventures of the Colonel's life in which he was an honest antagonist in honest differences of opinion between himself and others have been omitted entirely.

The emphasis of the picture is on Colonel Roosevelt's life before he became President. His conflicts with "big business," with Congress and members of the Ananias Club are scarcely suggested. There is no mention of his relation to the Panama Canal, and, so far as the film shows, the Progressive Party never existed. "The Fighting Roosevelts" might well take the title of "A Boy's Life of Theodore Roosevelt," for its episodes are chiefly those that will stir the enthusiastic imagination of a boy. Which is to say that they will appeal to the imagination of the crowd. Above all things, "The Fighting Roosevelts" is a crowd picture.

What scenes Mr. Nigh has made he has made well, and the acting is generally good. The players impersonating Colonel Roosevelt at different ages suggest him strongly by their performances and makeup.

There are several exquisite bits in "Everywhere with Prizma," which starts off the Rivoli picture program this week, but some of the scenes in this heterogeneous collection serve only to emphasize the fact that color-photography has not yet been perfected.

The featured offering is "His Parisian Wife," in which Elsie Ferguson, ably supported by David Powell, Courtney Foote, Frank Losee, and Cora Williams, does some of the best screen acting of her career in one of the worst photoplays which have been inflicted upon Broadway for a long time. In the first place, it is not a photoplay at all, but a succession of animated illustrations for accompanying text, and, in the second place, although the opening scenes evolve a situation out of which drama could have grown, the story becomes typical "movie" claptrap. In the beginning Miss Ferguson is a French girl who romantically meets a young New Englander wandering about Paris, and becomes his wife with a rush. The man, impersonated by David Powell, takes his bride to the traditionally ruled and regulated home of his parents, where she does not fit at all—and the spectator begins to expect developments with a meaning, but gets seemingly endless reels of the kind of trash some producers think the public wants.

"The Way of a Man with a Maid," in which Bryant Washburn, Wanda Hawley, and Fred Goodwin show what good comedy work they can do, is the photoplay at the Rialto. If it had been limited to two, or, perhaps, three, reels, it would have been a delightful piece of triviality, but stretched out as it is to the length prescribed for features, it is tiresome.

"Labrador," a Post travel picture, shows magnificent and interesting views off the coast of the Canadian province and in its curious fishing villages.

Burton Holmes delivered his second illustrated lecture, "With the Yanks in Paris," at Carnegie Hall last night and will repeat it this afternoon.

OPERAS FOR NEXT WEEK.

Daily and Often Double Performances by Two Companies.

The Metropolitan yesterday posted, earlier than usual, its operas for another week, the season's twelfth, which will coincide with the first of the Chicago company, already announced at the Lexington. Beginning next Monday there will be daily, and often double-daily, performances at either house, and the season should be at its height for five weeks thereafter.

Mr. Gatti-Casazza announces "La Forza del Destino" next Monday, with Caruso and Ponselle; Tuesday, a special matinée of "Madame Butterfly," with Farrar, Lazaro, Montesanto, and that evening, "Crispino," in Brooklyn, with Hempel, Braslau, and Scotti; Wednesday, "Oberon," Ponselle and Martinelli; Thursday, "Samson et Dalila," Caruso and Matzenauer.

Charles Hackett will make a Friday début in "Barber of Seville," with Hempel, De Luca, and Mardones. On Saturday, Feb. 1, the new Puccini operas reach a fifth hearing at the matinée, with Farrar, De Luca, and others, and that evening will be a revival of "L'Oracolo," with Sundelius, Scotti, Didur, in double bill with "Coq d'Or," in which the cast is the same as tonight.

Chicago Opera Changes.

Mr. Campanini has made a slight change in the schedule of his first week of the Chicago Opera at the Lexington. Through this rearrangement, Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" will be presented on Tuesday night of next week, and Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" will be the Wednesday opera. This entails no change in the casts formerly named for the two operas before they were reversed.

Yvonne Gall and John O'Sullivan will have their joint début on Tuesday, while Tamaki Miura will return on Wednesday. Mary Garden heads the casts of both Fevrier's "Gismonda" and "Monna Vanna," as well as a matinee "Thais." There will be a popular "Tales of Hoffmann" and a Friday première of Leroux's "Le Chemineau."

The Hippodrome management announces that, by arrangement with the Lexington, the Sunday night concerts of the Chicago Opera Company during its New York engagement will again be held at the big Sixth Avenue house. Four concerts have been arranged for, the first being Sunday evening, Feb. 2. The soloists will include both Galli-Curci and Rosa Raisa in the course of the series.

Concerts of a Day.

The Philharmonic Society had a rare afternoon to itself yesterday in Carnegie Hall, when a sold-out house greeted the orchestra's program, devoted to Tschaikowsky and Liszt. Before the "Pathetic" symphony an elegy from Tschaikowsky's Third Suite was played in place of the "Voyevoda" overture, the music of which did not arrive. Liszt's "Tasso" had a less interesting "Epilogue" to the same title, that was perhaps unfamiliar, and the matinée closed with his "Hungarian Rhapsody" No. 2.

Efrem Zimbalist, the violinist, was heard in last evening's concert at the Metropolitan in Lalo's "Symphony Espagnole" and solo pieces by Tschaikowsky-Auer and Sarasate. Marie Sundelius sang the bird song from "Pagliacci," Paul Althouse a tenor air from "Tosca," with songs by Strickland and Sanderson, and José Mardones, bass, an air from "Ernani." The orchestra under Hageman played Lalo's overture to "Le Roi d'Ys" and a symphonic poem, "Stenka Razine," by Glazounow.

3,000,000 PROTEST HIGH THEATRE TAX

Managers Say Public's Petition Will Begin to Reach Washington Today.

MAYOR IS A SIGNER HERE

Committee Says 10 Per Cent. Rate Cut Business a Third—Sees Loss with Tax Doubled.

Three million protests against the 20 per cent. theatre tax, the result of the theatrical managers' campaign up to and including Saturday night, will begin to reach Washington this morning from all over the country. Members of the Managers' Committee estimated yesterday that 1,000,000 signatures a day will be obtained in the various playhouses of the country during the present week, and these will be forwarded daily from each city to the Senate Committee on Finance and the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

A summary of the alleged effect of the original 10 per cent. tax upon the theatres, together with an estimate of the damage which will be wrought by an increased impost, was issued by the managers yesterday following a meeting during the morning in the New York Theatre Building. It was in part as follows:

"When the original 10 per cent tax went into effect, the theatres throughout the provincial districts of the United States, embracing all the smaller cities and the one-night stands, were affected by a decrease of business to the extent of one-third the previous box office takings. It is now carefully and thoroughly estimated that, should the tax be increased to 20 per cent. on theatre tickets the theatrical business throughout the country will be affected to the extent of fully 60 per cent.

"Moreover, a large number of the smaller attractions will be wiped out, thus entailing the closing of hundreds of theatres throughout the land, and putting thousands of people out of employment. Not only will the people who are directly interested and employed in attractions and theatres and all the by-products of the theatrical business be affected, but also will the transportation lines of the country, including railroads and street car lines, t Hotels, cigar stores, florists, candy shops and innumerable other industries will find their receipts depleted to a very large degree."

The weekly Sunday afternoon performance for soldiers and sailors at the Manhattan Opera House was turned into a tax protest meeting, and about 4,000 uniformed men signed the rolls. Addresses were made by George Gordon Battle and William A. Brady. Mayor Hylan was among those who signed the petition at a benefit performance at the Hippodrome in the evening.

One of the plans which will be put into operation by the managers today will be the canvassing of businesses indirectly allied with the theatre, such as florists' shops and taxicab companies. About a score of Hippodrome chorus girls will take up that work this morning, and the plan will probably be extended during the week to include other stores and the large office buildings.

DRAMA

By John Corbin

Yvette Guilbert Canonised.

The manners and morals of mediaeval pietism are being illustrated at the Neighborhood Playhouse in Grand Street, which is producing "Guibour," a French miracle play of the fourteenth century, with Yvette Guilbert in the title rôle. The little drama presents its heroine as an idealisation of chastity and fidelity, and the way in which it makes her assert her character is certainly quaint.

A model of matronly virtues, not least among which is a sincere and generous love for her young son-in-law, the most scandalous reports are circulated about her relations with the young man. It is really more than a mediaeval idealization of the feminine virtues can stand. So Guibour sets roundly to work and has the young man murdered in the wine cellar. Her husband is shocked by the fatality, and her daughter is naturally reduced to the most piteous lamentations; but Guibour, as it seems, rejoices that she has achieved a vindication of her womanly ideal.

The First Officer of the Law, however, prosaically suspects a crime, and puts Guibour through the third degree in a surprisingly modern manner. She confesses and is condemned to be burned at the stake. Faggots are plied at her feet, and flames begin to rage about her. But at the critical moment the Virgin steps from her niche on the neighboring church, proclaims the idealism of Guibour's feminine virtues, and sets her free, quite unscorched. It subsequently appears that she is canonized. Certainly she has absurdly human and quaintly humorous visions of further parleyings with Our Lady and her saints and, at the close, she is escorted by a company of nuns to end her days in sacred retirement. Her dear daughter, of course, remains a widow, and her dear son-in-law a corpse. Whatever the play may teach as to feminine virtues in general, it scarcely tends to increase the confidence of menfolk in mothers-in-law.

The production renders admirably the extravagant and often laughable, yet sincerely pious spirit of the play. Rollo Peters is the son-in-law, Alice Lewisohn his bereaved young wife, and Irene Lewisohn the statue of the Virgin, which comes to life. The production is rich in costume and pageantry, and the musical accompaniment, including a mass, is excellent. Historically, the occasion is most interesting and, to those who delight in the oddities of things mediaeval, it affords much entertainment.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

"Just Around the Corner," a comedy, with music, by George V. Hobart and Herbert Hall Winslow, will be seen here at the Longacre Theatre two weeks from tonight. Marie Cahill will be the star of the piece, and the cast will include George MacQuarrie, Eugenie Blair, and others.

The Greenwich Village Theatre will reopen on Saturday night, Feb. 8, with "Hobohemia," a dramatization by Sinclair Lewis of his story of the same name. Frank Conroy will again be the Director.

Klaw & Erlanger will bring "The Velvet Lady" to the New Amsterdam Theatre on Monday night, Feb. 3. The piece is a musical comedy based upon "A Full House," with book and lyrics by Henry Blossom and score by Victor Herbert.

Free performances of "Tillie," at Henry Miller's Theatre, and "Keep It to Yourself," at the Thirty-ninth Street, took place last night before audiences of uniformed men.

Bertha Kalich, in the course of her engagement at the Fulton Theatre in "The Riddle: Woman," will give several Friday matinees of new one-act plays. Among these are "The Dream of an Autumn Sunset," by Gabriele d'Annunzio, and a play by John Corbin.

CELESTINS VICHY

The Vichy Company

BEGS to extend appreciation to the Medical Profession and the general public of America for their patronage and their patience with the difficulties imposed on Celestins Vichy by war conditions.

As you know, the Celestins Vichy Springs are the property of the French Republic, and the French Government, realizing the high regard of American physicians and the public for Celestins Vichy, has done everything in its power to avoid cutting off shipments to America altogether.

That shipments have been far from adequate during the past four years and the condition and packing of the goods has not always been right—we are unhappily aware.

But we can now announce, and do so gladly, that the packing and shipping of Celestins Vichy are now back to peace time standards.

Cargo space, while still limited, is being found.

Packing supplies, though also limited as yet, are being obtained in sufficient quantities to guarantee perfect delivery.

We can definitely foresee the time when the supply of Celestins Vichy in this country will be adequate for a constantly increasing demand, and each bottle carefully packed the real French way.

CELESTINS VICHY

A delightful table water with highly medicinal qualities. Owned by and bottled under the direct control of the French Government. Ask your physician.

THE NATIONS AT PARIS.

If all mankind had walked in the ways of righteousness the principles of morality would have been very little talked about. So, but for the Great Transgression of 1914 the nations of the world would not have come together to take thought about the rules of international behavior. The crime of Germany has moved the whole world, because the whole world was awakened to a sense of its danger. No shock less violent could have communicated to the nations that tremendous impulse of which the effects were made visible in the Hall of Peace of the French Foreign Office at the first formal session of the Peace Conference on Saturday. Five years ago nobody would have imagined the coming together of that great company. "More nations are represented "here than were ever represented in "such a conference before," said President WILSON in proposing Mr. CLEMENCEAU as Permanent Chairman; and Mr. CLEMENCEAU spoke of it as a conference "of all the civilized nations of the earth."

There was no trumpery of pomp and splendor, no fussiness of titles or precedence, no concern about the dignity of august personages, no barbaric ostentation of raiment. The reports say nothing about orders and gold lace. It was a meeting of international business men for a business transaction, the most momentous in the world's history. It was a chosen company; no man took his seat in that council by right of birth or title or any accident of mere personal or political fortune dissociated from merit. They were there, every one of them, by virtue of intellectual and moral fitness to take part in the work to be done. Every one bore the mandate of the people of his nation, and all the mandates are of one tenor, that each nation shall be the master of its own destiny, that the world shall be at peace.

In a council under such instructions, meeting for such purposes, it is inevitable that the delegates of this nation should have a place among the foremost. WASHINGTON warned us "against the insidious wiles of foreign influence"; in extending our commercial relations with foreign nations we should "have with them as little political connection as possible." "Europe," he said, "has a set of "primary interests which to us have "none, or a very remote relation." It is in a large measure due to our avoidance of "permanent alliances," to our consistent policy of friendship for all, that the other nations, as to a just and impartial friend, now turn to us for counsel and for guidance. But chiefly it is because the "primary interests" of Europe are no longer remote from our own, it is because in this great crisis of civilization the primary interest of the nations is one, the supreme interest, the common interest of establishing on earth the reign of justice and peace; and at a time when so many of the old forms and the old ideas have gone by the board, it is natural that the Commissioners of the other nations at Paris should regard with peculiar interest and attention the representatives of the United States, a nation whose institutions are founded upon those principles of liberty and equality of rights to which all the peoples of the world now aspire and where the experience of nearly a century and a [illegible] to their worth and [illegible].

De TOCQUEVILLE was the first to give [illegible] study to the working of democratic government in America. Since his time the whole world has devoted itself to the subject, but never so assiduously as at this moment. It is fortunate for us and for our fellowmen that in this present time, so big with possibilities of happiness for the nations, the people of the United States have a spokesman of Mr. WILSON's unequaled power for the interpretation of their political faith and the expression of their hope of the universal acceptance of those beliefs as to the relation of the individual to the State and of States to each other in which they have found contentment and prosperity. That other great English-speaking democracy from which we inherited so much and the democracies of the French and of the Italians stand with us at the conference as apostles of the new faith, faith in just dealing among nations, in the renunciation of selfish greed, in the adoption of a law of conduct, and a mutual pledge of faithful observance. The great part, if not the decisive part, we were able to take in the war gives weight and authority to our representations at the conference. The words of President POINCARE and of Mr. CLEMENCEAU on Saturday show a close accord between them and Mr. WILSON in respect to the vital, constructive work of the council; their utterances and those of the British Prime Minister and of the President are of the best augury for harmony and agreement.

The world is very tired of war, it loathes war, and at Paris it is going to make a determined effort to substitute the appeal to reason and justice for the appeal to arms. The effort will succeed, for, whatever doubts may linger in the minds of statesmen of the older school, the people are resolved that it shall succeed. Many old-fashioned notions, probably some old-fashioned statesmen, are going to be disregarded. Some of our American publicists here at home, skeptical of the authority or of the triumph of these new canons of international conduct, stand apart, in some disdain, from the company of believers. We are firmly convinced that they will regret their want of faith. The nations are going to form a league against war, for peace. Men of the international habit of mind, we should suppose, would find more joy in helpful suggestion than in barren opposition. Why not recognize the bygoneness of the Holy Alliance and the Concert of Europe?

PROTECTION OF CIVILIZATION.

Marshal FOCH, the incomparable soldier of our time, bringer of victory, thinks, and talks, like a soldier when he looks forward to a peace commensurate with the victory, "a peace as "absolute as was our success and "which will guard us against all "future aggressions. France has a "right to effective measures of pro-"tection after the formidable efforts "she put forth to save civilization. "The natural frontier which will pro-"tect civilization is the Rhine." Again, "the Rhine is the common "barrier of all the Allies * * * the "guarantee of peace * * * let us "watch on the Rhine."

It might be urged that by the Germans the Rhine had ceased to be regarded as a barrier or a defense. To them, planning war, the Rhine was a clog to the swift invasion of France, through two neutral countries. Great bridges like that between Bingen and Rüdesheim were built at enormous cost to make direct communication between the interior and main points of German concentration. It might be urged, too, that the development of air war has made "natural" frontiers and defenses largely useless. But the obvious objection to Marshal FOCH's proposal is that it belongs to an outworn gospel. Natural frontiers, strategic frontiers! How often have Generals, statesmen, and diplomatists fought, haggled, and made treaties, not guaranteeing peace, not in the expectation of peace, but so that the winner in the war might be better able to assault or defend himself against the beaten nation in the next war.

Everybody knows that Alsace-Lorraine was grabbed for primarily military reasons; that the boundaries of the steal were mostly determined by the General Staff; that Metz was swallowed against BISMARCK's wish, because MOLTKE insisted on it. Metz, he said, was equal to an army of 100,000. And to BISMARCK, Alsace was a fine glacis.

The old way, the Treaty of Frankfort way, was to make peace with a view to making war. The Peace Conference at Paris is to make, or try to make, a lasting peace. It contemplates peace as the permanent future condition of the world. War is to be prevented or punished, if the offense comes, by the League of Nations. Not mountains, passes, rivers, fortifications, but the associated strength and will of nations are to be the barriers against war, the guarantees of peace. Not the Rhine, but the association of her allies and coleaguers will protect France and civilization.

Naturally, it is hard for a trained soldier like Marshal FOCH to throw off the old theory and practice. It seems just about as hard for civilians, for diplomatists, politicians, journalists. We hear continually of the dominion of the Adriatic, control of the Adriatic, as if this were 1866, not 1919. So every nation to be reconstituted must have such-and-such territory for defense, for strategic purposes. These are formulas that must be unlearned. The League of Nations is to defend. At Paris preparations are to be made not for but against another war.

OPEN DIPLOMACY.

"Open diplomacy" does not mean that every word said in preparing a treaty should be shouted to the whole world and submitted to all the misconstructions that malevolence, folly, and evil ingenuity could put upon it. Open diplomacy is the opposite of secret diplomacy, which consisted in the underhand negotiation of treaties whose very existence was kept from the world. It consisted also in the modification of openly negotiated treaties by secret protocols and even by secret treaties negotiated by some of the Powers behind the backs of the others. It is against this kind of double dealing and secret dealing, the mother of wars, that the world has protested. It has demanded the substitution of open diplomacy for secret diplomacy. But open diplomacy does not turn a peace conference into a debating society.

It would be unreasonable for the newspaper correspondents at Versailles to expect that the delicate work of reconciling divergent points of view on so tender a subject as national interests should be wholly conducted in their presence. The conferees, by reserving the right of holding executive sessions while they admit the correspondents to open sessions, have gone as far as the needs of the public demand. The world has intrusted the Peace Conference with the work of preparing the treaty. It wishes to know what is done, and why it is done; but the sensible part of it, at any rate, has no desire to have spread before it all the heart-to-heart talks and turns of phrase of men performing the gigantic task of reconciling national differences and coming to agreement. It wishes to give malice and anti-Ally propaganda as little as possible to distort and warp. It knows from four years' experience what infinite possibilities there are in that line.

THE POLISH COMPROMISE.

Not too soon the conflicting parties in Poland have come together on a coalition Government which shall hold office until a body based on the popular will, as expressed in elections to be held about the end of the month, shall supersede it. Mr. PADEREWSKI is to be Premier; General PILSUDSKI, head of the Government established after the German collapse, remains as Foreign Minister. Two of his colleagues stay with him; most of the other members are nonparty administrators. As peace delegates there will be Mr. DMOWSKI, head of the National Committee to which Mr. PADEREWSKI belongs, and a representative of PILSUDSKI.

The history of Poland presents a long and unedifying series of destructive invasions by Turk and Tartar, Muscovite and Swede, which were possible only because the Poles were busy quarreling among themselves. History was repeating itself till yesterday, with a Bolshevist army marching on Warsaw while Poles disputed over the leadership. This difficulty is now happily solved under a new Government which is purely a temporary trustee of the State, and which by its composition expresses the feeling that the first duty of all Poles is to protect the nation. If the conflicts of Poland with Lithuania and the Ukraine can be settled in the same way—and hope that this may be possible has not yet disappeared—a barrier will be erected which the Red Army will hardly be able to pass.

ARTICLE XIX.

Dr. FISHER, chief of the Physical Department of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. and a member of the National War Work Council, has written an interesting letter to the Secretaries of the various branches of the association. Hitherto each branch has permitted, restricted, or forbidden smoking in its building. "We all deplore," he writes, "the "great increase in the smoking habit. "We realized that under war condi-"tions there were extenuating condi-"tions which seemed to make it nec-"essary for the association to distrib-"ute tobacco. These conditions, how-"ever, do not apply to peace times or "civilian conditions."

Dr. FISHER believes, however, that signs, "No Smoking Allowed," would be unadvisable, and that the returned soldiers and sailors shouldn't be harangued on the evil effects of smoking. Without too much moralizing they should be taught what tobacco does. Posters will be furnished, and the decline of a rifle shooter's or baseball pitcher's accuracy after even one cigar will be shown by the record.

With all respect to Dr. FISHER, himself a scientific and statistical expert on the work of the unholy herb nicotian, the educational campaign which he proposes, however to be praised for its tolerant and patient spirit, will not avail against this remaining unslain giant, twin evil with rum. What a procession of counterblasters from JAMES I. to the Rev. GEORGE TRASK of Fitchburg, Mass., and happy memory! With what sublime rhetoric of hand and nose JOHN B. GOUGH used to draw a plug of tobacco from his pocket, smell of it as if it were the quintessence of all the roses, cry, "Ah, you black devil, I love you," and fling the accursed thing away. You felt that Satan was routed. Almost you could hear the Black Goat bleat.

Then there was Dr. DIO LEWIS, who pointed to General N. P. BANKS as evidence of the spacious intellectuals which the nonsmoker is sure of. These elder and many younger if not better soldiers, female and male, of our own day, too many and too modest here to be recorded, have conducted campaigns of education against the Rolled Serpent, the pipe that poisons and the leaf that kills; the paper cigar, a foreign interloper, regarded as the mark of "dudes" up to the Philadelphia Exposition of 1876, and now, alas! staining the lips of truckmen and longshoremen and imperiling their health; against all the abominations of the weed of sin. Vain the effort! More people smoke. Women smoke. Indeed, in some regrettable parts of the world, children, babes in arms almost, smoke like Aetna or the Cities of the Plain, and the pledge of Little Robert Reed is forgot.

Moral suasion will not do. Have our reformers forgotten that people used to "drink" tobacco? It is a brother of drink. It prevents centenarians from taking those exercises with the Indian clubs and parallel bars that are necessary to their health. It is a poison, like alcohol. It is wasteful. What is more and most of all, millions of folks get pleasure out of it. Is America to be a country in which folks are to be allowed to enjoy themselves? Not much. The Nineteenth Amendment shoves a saintly nose above the horizon.

LOCAL AND NATIONAL REGULATION.

The application of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit receiver for court authority to issue $16,000,000 of certificates comes just as the Director General discloses the need for a second half billion to replenish the revolving fund for the railways. The Brooklyn company does not need sixteen millions because of a deficit in operating expenses of that amount. The receiver reports "capital expenditures repre-"senting a great many millions of "dollars have been met out of current "cash, or out of moneys temporarily "borrowed." The money is needed for the growth of the system under the dual plan, and the system must supply the funds from the nickel fares. Dividends must be sacrificed to the contract. The city administration even sets up the demand that the city has a right to take the system if the fares will not supply construction money. Just so it is obvious that a billion-dollar fund is not needed to supply a $200,000,000 deficit in the railways' operating income. The steam railway system is as incomplete as the dual subway system, and the Interstate Commission has taken the same stand as the city administration, that the rates and fares are for services rendered, and shall not supply funds for the increase of the earning power on which the rates and fares are based. Thus the conflict between theory and practice is evident, and it is time that those who operate the systems, as well as those who pay the rates and fares, should understand it, and settle it.

Nobody proposes that the growth of railways and public utilities shall stop. That is only another form of national and local strangulation. The need for the growth, and the fact that it is arrested, are proof that the facilities have hitherto been supplied at rates too low for maintenance and improvement. In both cases that has come about under public control which is uneconomic and not safe from taint of immorality. That may be said without reserve respecting the dual subway system, for it has been officially stated that there is an intention to acquire it at a sacrifice compelled by the controlling authorities, who then intend to raise the fares which they prevent the other partner from doing during the agreed term of his control. The case of the steam railways is less tainted by immorality, but it is marked by a greater degree of fanaticism in pursuit of a theory which has survived thirty years' demonstration of its falsity. There is no denying that the operating income of the railways is not supplying the country's need of railway facilities; under Government operation economies have been effected by reducing the amount and quality of service. There has been, too, an increase of rates above any the railways ever asked; but all has been swallowed up in operating costs. That is the reason that the Railway Director is applying to Congress, that is to the taxpayers, for grants in aid just as one local traction is applying to the courts for relief, and other local utilities are considering that step.

Neither the steam nor the electric railways would be in these reduced circumstances if they had a credit equal to the debit of war costs against their earnings. Their case differs from that of private businesses, because public authority has increased their costs and refused to allow them to increase their earnings. This is the factor which distinguishes the present embarrassment of public utilities from the previous epidemic of receiverships. That was marked by proof of both operating inefficiency and security scandals. That ill reputation harasses them now, although the operating efficiency is at the maximum and the security scandals at the minimum. Now the threat to the prosperity of the utilities and the convenience of their users is public maladministration, with suggestion of bad faith ranking with the ancient scandals. The threat is equally against the taxpayers. One way or another they must pay for the service they want, or not get it. Would the taxpayers, national or local, rather have their utilities grow by grants in aid or by rates fitted to the needs of the utilities by public authority, the needs to include the needs of the country for the growth of the systems that serve it?

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

They Knew the End Had Arrived.

That Marshal FOCH should have talked as he did about the armistice to the American newspaper correspondents in Treves evidences not only a realization on his part that to many people in several countries it seemed that the fighting stopped too soon, but also that, while he did not share that feeling, he had a certain amount and kind of sympathy with it and understood it fully. His remarks therefore constituted, in a way, a defense of his failure or refusal to continue the war until the German armies had been defeated in the field, literally and actually, and thereby the Germans had been deprived of their last excuse for denying that they were beaten in every sense of that word.

That, with the armistice coming as and when it did, they were not so deprived, subsequent events and statements have made irritatingly clear, but how empty their excuses are Marshal FOCH took pains to show. The surrender, he declared, was the result of despair—of the knowledge that the Allies, with the forces at their command, by one more attacking advance would make the destruction of the German military forces complete.

Theirs was the surrender of a man on whom another man has "the drop"—of a man for whom further resistance means immediate death. There are, of course, men who do not give up, even in those circumstances—to whom death seems preferable to the confession of defeat. The German commanders, however, were not of that quality. They raised high their hands, asked for terms, and accepted the terms that the victor offered, just as they would have accepted terms still more severe if he had seen fit to impose them.

Even Sure Victory Expensive.

As regards the severity of the terms that were imposed upon the Germans as the price of an armistice, there has been heard in some quarters not altogether unworthy of confidence the interesting assertion that the document offered to the Germans for signature was so drawn that they confidently were expected to refuse, and that when they did sign there was equal surprise and disappointment in the General Headquarters of the Allies. That report is not without a certain plausibility, but it entirely lacks anything like official confirmation, and there is nothing in the Foch interview even to hint that it is true. On the contrary, he said that the Germans took the course natural for men in their situation, thus justifying them, and in effect he asked why he should have gone on fighting when, without doing so, he obtained exactly what he wanted. He admitted that, as a General, he might have preferred the glory of an indisputably and utterly overwhelming victory over the enemy, but as a man he thought of the lives that even sure and easy conquest would have cost, and he preferred to save his men.

That is a side or phase of "militarism" deserving more of pacifist consideration than it will get, yet it has been exhibited innumerable times—far oftener, probably, than the only side of which the pacifists know, or at any rate the only one they ever mention in their impassioned orations.

Reviving an Old Grievance.

When KIPLING called Canada "Our Lady of the Snows," the Canadians felt or professed to feel that he had done them a bitter wrong. His appellation, they said, could have no other effect than that of confirming in the minds of all his many readers the belief—which the Canadians insisted was a wild illusion—that Canada was a chill, desolate region, where nobody except Eskimos could be really at home. They admitted that Canadian Winters brought cold weather with them, and enough snow to make good sleighing for several weeks, but they vehemently denied that theirs was an arctic land inhabited only by Hyperboreans.

As nobody, before or after reading KIPLING's verses, needed to be assured that Canada has Summers as well as Winters, or that there are several countries, some of them further to the south, where life is both harder and less comfortable all the year round than in Canada, the Canadian denunciations of the well-intentioned bard excited only friendly smiles and were dismissed as the products of the supersensitiveness of those who protest too much.

Now the old grievance has taken a new form, and it is not an outlander who gets scolded, but certain misguided Canadians who have proposed to give Princess PATRICIA, as a wedding present from the Canadian people, a magnificent set of Canada's best home-grown furs. A gift to the Princess, the protesting faction say, is the rightest sort of right, but why should it be of furs?

To give furs, they insist, will imply that Canada has nothing else of worth to give, that its people are still in the hunting stage of civilization—or of barbarism, rather—and that the arctic, or sub-arctic, calumny will be spread again. Some of the Canadians laugh at these anxieties, but others are deeply stirred and insist that the plan be changed.

The Princess, apparently, has not yet been consulted as to her own preferences, but as she has both summered and wintered in Canada more than a few times herself, probably the furs would not deceive her as to the nature of its climate, and probably, too, if asked, she would make a signed statement as to the habitability of the country.

He May Be Elected After All.

As the first—and perhaps only—nomination of Prince LICHNOWSKY to be President of the German Republic was made in this column, there is some satisfaction in recording here, as well as elsewhere in the paper, that his name leads all the rest in the list of delegates who are to speak for Germany when the Peace Conference gets ready to talk with her.

That, to be sure, is considerably less than an election to the Presidency of the German Republic, but it does go some way toward showing that the Prince really is a Presidential possibility. It also shows how great is the change that has come to pass in Germany since the not remote days when Prince LICHNOWSKY was abhorred by all the Germans who had a voice in deciding things, and when he was lucky not to be beheaded as a traitor for betraying the guilty secrets of his masters.

The hatred he then earned so well may serve him now as the foundation of a career that will carry him far and high.

A Roosevelt Memorial.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The writer has noted that Colonel Thompson expects to be able to secure a donation of a great deal of money for a Roosevelt memorial, and wishes to suggest that there could be no more interesting, permanent, and appropriate memorial to Theodore Roosevelt than the purchase of the Madison Square Garden and the changing of its name to "The Roosevelt Forum."

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

A Bill in Congress to Make the Metric System Compulsory.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Probably ninety-nine out of every hundred people you meet on the street would look on you with amazement as one who had wandered far from the path of reason and common sense if you should tell them that there was a well-organized movement among scientific men generally to secure legislation at Washington changing the established ideas of every one in this country as to the weight and measure of everything. And yet you would be telling the truth and the ninety-nine would be the mistaken ones. This agitation, which has been going on for years, has acquired new vigor since the war began, in 1914, and is now under full headway. A bill (S. 5037) has been introduced in Congress by Senator Shafroth of Colorado making the use of metric weights and measures compulsory (except in the survey of the public lands) in the departments of the Government after Jan. 1, 1920, and making the metric system the standard of the United States after Jan. 1, 1922.

Furthermore, this scheme for the compulsory change of the country's weights and measures is indorsed by high officials of the Government. A few days before Senator Shafroth introduced his bill the United States Section of the International High Commission at Washington, of which the Hon. W. G. McAdoo is Chairman and the Hon. John B. Moore of New York, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Rowe, John H. Fahey of Brookline, Mass., Senator Fletcher of Florida, Peter W. Goebel of Kansas City, Mayor Andrew J. Peters of Boston, Samuel Untermyer of New York, Paul M. Warburg of New York, and Colonel John H. Wigmore, U. S. A., are members, adopted a resolution calling for the exclusive use of the metric system in the United States.

Let us see what this means. A person standing 5 feet 10 inches becomes 1,778 millimeters tall, and without any change in height. A mile a minute or sixty miles an hour becomes 1.609 kilometers a minute or 96.54 kilometers an hour, and without any change in speed. A town lot 60 feet front and 120 feet deep, with an area of 7,200 square feet, becomes 18.29 meters front and 36.58 meters deep, with an area of 668.9 square meters, and without any change in size. Nine thousand pounds of coal at $11 a ton, plus 40 cents for carrying in, costing $51.30, becomes 4,082 kilograms at $12.12½ a tonneau plus 44 cents for carrying in, and costs the same amount, $51.30, unless the dealers change the prices to convenient figures, say, $12.25 per tonneau, plus 45 cents for carrying, for no one imagines they would reduce prices, and then the coal bill would be larger. Eight thousand cubic feet of water at 12 cents a hundred, costing $9.60 in Brookline, becomes 226.53 cubic meters at 4.237 cents a cubic meter, after the water meters have been changed from feet to meters, unless the town revises the prices, probably upward, to easy figures.

All the standards of the innumerable transactions at retail would be changed. Dress goods at 50 cents a yard become 54.7 cents a meter until the price is raised to easy figures. A bed sheet 2½ yards long becomes 228½ centimeters without any change of length. A man wearing what is now a No. 16 collar will wear a No. 40½ collar by the centimeter size, and without any enlargement of his neck. A lady who now wears a No. 4 shoe will have to call for a pair of No. 25½ when she orders a new pair by the scientific scale. A pound, say, of butter at 90 cents becomes .454 kilogram at $1.98 a kilogram. It would soon become $2 a kilogram. A quart basket of berries measuring 67 cubic inches will shrink to a liter-basket measuring 61 cubic inches, and we may be sure the dealers will consent to this without change of price. An 11-ounce can of beans becomes 312 grams; an 8-ounce can of salmon 227 grams; a 13-ounce can of tomatoes 369 grams—until the cans are all changed to convenient sizes and the prices revised, upward, of course, to convenient figures.

All the screw threads in the country will have to be changed. The new couplings for fire hose and hydrants and for airbrakes will not fit the old and must be changed all at once if fire losses and railroad accidents are not to be the result of this scientific scheme. Then there is the indescribable confusion by the use of the new screw threads that will not fit the old on gas, water, and steam pipe and fittings.

These illustrations of the scientific program of weights and measures could be continued indefinitely, for it affects everybody and everything, but I have given enough of them to show into what an extreme of confusion the affairs of the American people will be thrown if the scientists and certain officials have their way. And all this bedevilment of our affairs without any compensating advantage, for no one has shown or can show the slightest benefit from the change, say, in the typical cases I have given, for example.

Unless the public is aroused and makes its will known the pro-metric plot will succeed. If the scientists are so anxious for uniformity, let them adopt the standards of the people, for the scientists are few and the people are many. Our foreign trade seems to be growing as it is. If the metric system is scientific, let it remain so. If it is bound to come, let it come on its merits, and let it go at that. But let us not allow any scientific cabal, any group of loose-thinking officials, or any Congress to place on the statute books a law punishing by fine or imprisonment or both the measuring of cloth by the yard, land by the foot, beans by the quart, the weighing of coal by the ton and ice by the pound. Has officialdom fallen bodily under the pseudo-scientific spell? Is there not one public official who will stand for the people against the scientific propaganda?

REGENERATION.

Before I went to war I lived my life
In luxury and softness, seeing naught
Of the despair and sad, unceasing strife
Of thousands with whose lives my ease was bought.

Before I went to war I took no thought,
But heedless, careless, dallied on with sin;
Saw not the price at which a soul is bought,
Nor knew the souls men buy as mine own kin.

I went to war—tore out my dying roots
From the stagnant soil the flesh was bedded in.
I'd thought to find my comrades uncouth brutes—
Instead, found men, and learned that sin is sin!

And Liberty!—I learned to know thy call
Is God's own call to help the world in pain.
So, God, I pray thee not to pardon all,
But do not let me close my eyes again!

THE Y. M. C. A. AND THE ARMY

Criticism of Methods and Personnel Heard From the Troops Is Held to be Unjustified.

By BURGES JOHNSON.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you permit me to join in this discussion of Y. M. C. A. efficiency in France which has already taken some space on your editorial page? I read first the article by your correspondent Mr. James, which seemed to me discreditable because he is a trained reporter whose business it is to examine his facts and not accept hearsay; yet he made no charges which any intelligent observer in the field might not have easily sifted and dismissed. Mr. Mott's reply, may I say with all due respect, seemed merely mildly protesting.

It was my good fortune to spend two months in the "Y" uniform with the American troops at the actual front. I was not a Secretary assigned to a canteen or unit, but went from point to point, seeing the "Y" men at work, helping if I could in the short time I was with each one, and so getting an insight into their activities; and since I was not an official inspecting the work, but merely an "entertainer," I am confident that what I saw was natural, every-day behavior. I went from Pont-à-Mousson to Alsace, from division to division, and then joined a field hospital in the Second Division for the St. Mihiel drive; then up to a point near Chalons, preliminary to the final drive of the war. Incidentally, I was not a "Y. M. C. A. man" before going over.

All of the criticism against the "Y" that I heard in the field, and I heard a good deal, fell into one or the other of two groups. It was either due to the unsuitable personality of an individual or it was an attack upon methods of canteen work.

As to criticisms due to the canteen, they were of many sorts, yet almost invariably without justification. The enlisted men were a crowd of normal boys who thronged the canteens and were naturally kindly in their judgments, but they came in an endless stream, and where there was an explanation for some apparent fault it was almost impossible for the canteen worker to repeat the story over and over and over again throughout the day. The boys who heard it would weigh it and accept it. The ones who did not hear it would go out silently, grumble, and make their charges.

Let me cite one typical criticism. When the "Y" warehouse for the 2d Division was at Toul there had been a prolonged shortage of chocolate. Finally several boxes were received and divided pro rata among the Secretaries in the field. The Secretary with a battalion of the 6th Marines got his proportion; the Secretary with an Engineers' outfit got a smaller supply. They planned to make it go as far as possible by limiting each purchaser to half a cake. The boys always understood these limitations and co-operated helpfully. But imagine the Engineers' Secretary, with his canteen near the front, suddenly raided by a crowd of tired, muddy, hungry marines, begging for chocolate, and too tired to hunt their own canteen. The Secretary could only say: "Here is all the chocolate that I've got, and it's meant for the Engineers." I can imagine the marines turning away disappointed, or angry, and saying: "What is the 'Y' for? Is it for the army, or just for the Engineers?" Or, supposing the Secretary decided to let his supplies go to the first comers. Then along came the Engineers to whom he was assigned. They knew him. He was acquainted with most of them personally. "I am sorry," he says, "but I gave all my chocolate to the marines, although they had a Secretary, with their share of the supplies, somewhere in the neighborhood." Whichever way the Secretary acted a lot of boys were sure to feel aggrieved.

I heard many criticisms due to such a situation. Why did it never happen in the case of the Salvation Army, for instance? Because the Salvation Army, splendidly effective as it was, honored by every one who dealt with its representatives in the field, was infinitely smaller in size and in obligations. The United States Army had not requested it to take over the canteen. It purchased materials up to the limit of its funds, made pies and doughnuts as near the front as it could, and gave them away to all comers while they lasted. Its representatives were not assigned to different units. If a boy got a doughnut and a helpful word, he was grateful. If he did not get the doughnut or did not see a Salvation Army man, he had no possible or fancied grievance.

I covered a good part of the American front. I think I heard samples of every kind of criticism, and there was plenty in the air. One officer likened the American family in France to a great sewing circle, everybody gossiping about everybody else. He overstated it, but that is a Major's comment, and not mine. What startles me now is the fact that certain new criticisms of "Y" work which seem to be arising from some source or other were not heard in the days of action. Some one now is saying, for instance, that "Y" Secretaries did not get to the front. Surely the number killed and wounded, decorated for bravery in action, the large number of huts captured by the Germans, disprove this. The Colonel of a regiment in the 1st Division said to me: "Four 'Y' Secretaries were attached to my regiment. Three of them were wounded in action, and the fourth escaped through no fault of his own. I have recommended all four for citation."

Statements as to profiteering and undue cost are not worth answering specifically here, because any one honestly desirous of knowing the truth can get army reports showing that every cost was subjected to official investigation by some one appointed by General Pershing, as well as by the War Department; that the budget of expenditures of the "Y" was frequently studied and approved by the military authorities.

It was an interesting fact about all sorts of criticisms in the field that the original critic made his charge in the half good-natured routine sort of way that was characteristic. I heard one branch of the army talk in just such a way about another branch, or men in another welfare organization talk about their own superiors. It was only half meant—a sort of safety valve in a time of great nervous strain. But the man who picked up such charges second-hand often passed them on with added circumstantial detail and a bitterness that is unexplainable.

As to criticisms due to personnel, about one in thirty of the "Y" men I met who were dealing directly with soldiers seemed to me not well suited to their tasks. It seemed remarkable that the percentage was not greater in an organization suddenly expanding from rather narrow beginnings to meet this great emergency. Even the army, expanding with the same rapidity, found itself with many officers in the field unfit to command men; not subject to definite charges, you understand, but just unfit to command. The army is fully militarized. It can take a man out of the field where his unadaptability endangers lives and send him away without explanation on any sort of assignment which "saves his face"; and the army, with its splendid efficiency, was carrying on that sifting process all the time. So was the "Y," but it could not do it so speedily. The man of bad moral standards, such as any one of the three recently discovered and convicted, was a comparatively easy problem. All it needed was a little evidence, sufficient to prove the unfitness, and home or to prison he went. But I honestly believe that the worst charges to be brought against a "Y" Secretary in the field were lack of humor and lack of tact, and unfortunately you cannot jail a man for either of them. It is pretty hard for a partially militarized organization to send him home because of them if he has volunteered for a year's service and earnestly desires to serve. He can be taken away from contact with enlisted men and put perhaps into warehouse work. That sort of sifting was going on remarkably well, but it had to be slower, and before the evil of a few poorly selected "Y" Secretaries was overcome many criticisms had gotten so well under way that they could not be checked even after the cause was removed. One of the most interesting phenomena among our boys was the speed with which rumor would carry. An incident at one end of the line would be reported by boys in divisions all along the line as having occurred in new places. The stupidity or misbehavior of a single "Y" Secretary would echo and re-echo and become current gossip, not because it was commonplace, but because it was notable that a "Y" man should commit such an error of decency, or tact, or judgment.

I said that one in thirty of those I saw seemed to me a poor selection. I am referring to Secretaries within the field of action, subjected to the severest tests. The one man might have been splendidly efficient at some other work or in a less exacting neighborhood. And remember this—that in the army the officer who did his work effectively, who was brave in action and a good commander of men, would arouse no comment. He is what we expect of all our officers. So the "Y" Secretary who attended faithfully to the exacting duties imposed upon him by the canteen, and at the same time did all sorts of welfare work that came to hand, aroused no comment. He did what was expected of the "Y." But the square peg in the round hole, the Secretary who developed a streak of yellow under some severe test, or perhaps worst of all, the man who was bound to save souls in his own narrow traditional way, aroused a storm of comment and, mind you, he was the one "Y" man with whom, perhaps, one thousand boys came into contact. They measured the "Y" by him, and brought against the whole organization charges which pertained to his personality alone.

The canteen was but one of the "Y" activities; when I saw such a city as Baccarat, with its rehabilitated theatre open every afternoon and evening, its park turned into an athletic field, its hotel again in operation, and the morale not merely of American troops but of the whole civilian population affected by these "Y" enterprises, I realised how small a part of the whole work the canteen was and what a handicap it might be. Other welfare organizations gave their smaller quantities of supplies free of charge to the troops. The "Y" had taken over the traditional army canteen, selling everything from bath towels to chewing tobacco. Neither officers nor men wanted these shops to give away their supplies, yet their operations show a deficit of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Our boys were not paupers. They wanted some place where they could make purchases with their spending money. But wherever troops went into action, the Secretaries accompanying those troops were supposed to requisition all of their own canteen supplies and give them away free, charging them up to "welfare work."

The canteen turned an army of welfare workers into an army of shopkeepers, which affected not only the welfare worker but the attitude of the enlisted men toward him. True, it gave the "Y" man a means of closer approach and a greater opportunity for service, but sometimes its terrific monotony took the spirit out of him and the constant necessity of reporting to the boys a lack of this or that item in the supplies took away his "pep" through no fault of his own. It is no criticism of the "Y" that supplies were often short. Ask any officer from the field how well the army commissary served him, with its long list of items often reduced to tapioca and matches at points where everyone clamored for tobacco and sweets.

But it is no argument at all to answer criticisms of one organization by charging similar faults in another. Let me summarize by saying that I had an opportunity to observe Y. M. C. A. secretaries in Bordeaux, Brest, Paris, and all along the American front. The dominant impression remaining in my mind is of a body of men and women wholly self-sacrificing, absolutely devoted, adapting themselves surprisingly well to multifarious tasks, with an occasional misfit so greatly in the minority as not to affect the picture, even though he has been able to stir up a noise vastly out of proportion to his importance. I feel that it was an honor to wear the "Y" uniform, and I wish here to express to the "Y" my gratitude for the rare opportunity I was given to perform even so brief and small a service.

Roosevelt's Entry Into Politics.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the year 1879 or 1880 James A. Roosevelt, with whom I had business relations, brought to my office a bland young fellow. Introducing him as his nephew, he asked me as a favor to him to push young Roosevelt forward in Republican politics. I was at that time the Republican leader of the Assembly district in which we both lived. I told James A. Roosevelt that I would gladly comply with his request, and a year or two later, needing a strong candidate for the Assembly, I secured for Theodore Roosevelt the nomination. He was elected, and that was his entry into politics. He always recognized my agency in the matter. While he was Governor I attended a meeting of the State Bar Association, and after congratulating the President of the association upon his address he said: "Let me introduce you to the Governor," who was standing next to him. Roosevelt, in his peculiarly incisive way, answered so loudly that every one in the room could hear him: "What, introduce me to my old boss? I like that!" I received from him from the White House a beautiful photograph with a charming inscription, which adorns my library.

POPE'S ENVOY HERE TO HONOR GIBBONS

POPE PRAISES OUR IDEALS

The White Star liner Lapland arrived yesterday from Liverpool via Brest with nearly 300 civilian passengers in addition to her complement of troops, after a rough voyage which hastened the death of Captain John H. Buckingham of New York of the United States Ordnance Department, and formerly the private secretary of Colonel Clarence W. Watson, ex-United States Senator from West Virginia, who was also a passenger on the liner after doing duty at Marseilles.

One of the most prominent passengers was Archbishop Bonaventura Cerretti, Under Secretary of State at the Vatican, who comes as a special envoy from Pope Benedict XV. to attend the golden jubilee of Cardinal Gibbons. He is the highest prelate of the Roman Catholic Church who has ever visited the United States. He was accompanied by the Rev. Dr. Roderick MacEachan of the Catholic University of Washington, D. C., as secretary, and was met by Bishop Patrick J. Hayes, Mgrs. Michael J. Lavelle and John Edwards, and Vicars General Gherardo Ferranti, John J. Dunn, and Thomas Carroll. The priests were represented by the Rev. Fathers Brady, Catterlin, and Fesselman. Among the laity on the pier were Justice Victor J. Dowling of the Appellate Division, ex-Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, and Nicholas F. Brady. Thomas E. Rush, Surveyor of the Port, escorted the committee on board the Lapland.

Before leaving the Archbishop celebrated mass in the drawing room on the upper promenade deck which was attended by a number of the passengers. It was his second celebration since the liner left Brest on Jan. 10.

Message from the Pope.

When he received the reporters the Archbishop reminded them that he had been in America from 1902 to 1911 as Papal Nuncio at Washington, and therefore felt that he was visiting friends and not coming to a strange country. He alluded to the bright sunshine, which they saw for the first time since leaving France, and said that he was glad to be here once again. In a statement which he had prepared before arrival in port Archbishop Cerretti said:

"I am happy indeed to be back again in America. It is like coming home. Here in this country I spent some of the happiest years of my life. I am especially glad to be here because my mission brings me to my much venerated friend, Cardinal Gibbons. I have come to represent the person of the Holy Father at the celebration of his Golden Episcopal Jubilee. Before leaving Rome I asked the Holy Father what I should say to the Americans for him.

"'Tell them,' he said, 'that I love and admire them. Tell them that I love their ardor and their spirit. Tell them that I am in full accord with their noble ideals and their high principles of freedom and justice.'

"In Paris I had the pleasure of meeting President Wilson. He was very kind and simple in his manner. As the European press said, it was a historic day when the head of the great American republic met the head of that old democratic institution founded by Christ nineteen centuries ago. America is looked upon today as the hope of the world. May God bless and prosper this good people."

Archbishop Cerretti added that he would have no other statement to make concerning church matters before meeting and conferring with other dignitaries in New York. He was grieved and shocked, he said, to learn of the death recently of Monsignor Sigourney W. Fay, whom he had known here and at Rome. He drove from Pier 61, North River, to the Archbishop's house on Madison Avenue, where rooms had been prepared for him.

Another passenger on the Lapland was Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, who had charge of the American mine laying bases at Cromartie and Inverness, Scotland, for the four months, during which 70,000 mines were put down in the North Sea, which bottled up the German submarine fleet and blew many of them to pieces.

"The area covered," said the Admiral, "was 245 miles by 20 miles wide, in which the mines were placed at different depths, so that the Hun U-boats could not slip by. The best work done by the 7,000 men under my command was laying 5,500 mines in four hours. This was not only a world record, but was also a greater number of mines than had ever been laid in any previous war. We have positive information that many enemy undersea craft were destroyed. All the plans had been drawn up for a similar mine barrage in the Mediterranean and we were just ready to start work when the armistice was signed.

"Our fleet consisted of eleven steamships of 5,000 to 6,000 gross tonnage each, four powerful ocean-going tugs, and several tenders. When the influenza epidemic broke out in Scotland there was a possibility of it spreading to our men and hindering the work of mine laying, which was most vital at that time, by enforcing strict health rules and ordering a men to wear a mask after he sneezed once it was kept down and there were only two deaths out of 7,000 men."

Must All Be Picked Up.

Admiral Strauss said that it would take a long time to pick all the mines up again, and the work had hardly been begun. The British Navy had three ships working with the American mine-laying fleet. He has had thirty-seven years sea service in the United States Navy, and this was only his third trip as a passenger, he said.

Another naval officer on the Lapland was Commander William Glassford, who had charge of the United States destroyer Shaw when her steering gear jammed at 6 A. M. on Oct. 9, 1918, and caused her to be rammed by the British transport Aquitania, which she was convoying. Commander Glassford said that the Shaw was nearly ready for sea after undergoing repairs in Portsmouth naval dockyard.

Lieutenant Geoffrey Edgar Duveen of the British Navy came home on sick leave after being blown up on the light cruiser Cassandra on Dec. 4, and was informed at Quarantine yesterday morning that his father, Henry Duveen, head of the art firm on Fifth Avenue, had died and was buried on Friday. The lieutenant had received a cable dispatch from his uncle, Joseph Duveen, telling him of his father's illness.

W. H. Wells, who represents an American business firm in London, said that he had served without pay in the Special Constabulary, which numbered 40,000, and had not missed a single air raid over London during the war. He said the German aviators were looked for every bright moonlight night, and a policeman on duty outside Marlborough House, where Queen Alexandra lives, was quite disappointed one fine night when they failed to appear, and said to him plaintively: "I did think the Hun boys would have been over to see us tonight." Mr. Wells added that the shrapnel from the anti-aircraft guns fell like hail in the streets and was more dangerous than the bombs, as there was so much more of it.

Sir Charles Carrick Allom, Chairman of the Gosport Aircraft Company, who is a well-known British sportsman and Chairman of the Boat Racing Association, said at the pier that he had heard people on board the ship remark that the war enthusiasm was not nearly so keen in England as it was in America.

"The only time the English were at all nervous," he continued, "was early in August, 1914, when for three days they were not certain whether the Government would enter the conflict on behalf of France and Belgium. We do not wear mourning, because our pride in our heroic dead forbids outward expression. We were not nearly at the end of our striking power, and Foch's call proved our morale and preparation. And that of France was better at the end than it was at the beginning of the great war. The best thing people can do is to talk less about demobilization until Bolshevism and revolution are as dead as Prussianism is today."

Sir Charles said in regard to future aviation that the Atlantic would be crossed within the next few months in a flying boat that would average seventy-five miles an hour on the round trip, and that this would have been done before if the British Government had allowed the engine to be used. For war it could carry a gun with ammunition nine feet long, and in peace time he expected to see one taking fifty passengers across in Summer time when the travel by air would be pleasant. Sir Charles is a member of the Reconstruction Committee in England, which is now engaged in solving the housing problem.

Colonel Offley Shore of the Indian staff of the British Army was also a passenger on the Lapland. In 1917 he traveled alone, armed only with a walking stick, from Archangel to Petrograd, Moscow and over the Caucasian Mountains into Persia, finally reaching Bagdad.

J. L. HEES WEDS AGAIN.

With Bride, Who was Miss Miller, He Will Sail for Japan.

The wedding is announced in the Presbyterian Church in Stamford, Conn., on Saturday, of James Leslie Hees of New York and Miss Patricia Lucile Miller, a daughter of Mrs. Jacob Miller of Butte, Mont., and New York. Mr. Hees had Sidney Tomkinson of New York and London as his best man, and the bride's niece, Miss Cecile Hough of this city, attended her. Mr. Hees is 58 years of age, and has been married before. His former wife was Miss Adela S. Moore of Detroit. Recently they were divorced, and Mrs. Moore Hees and their daughter, Miss Betty Hees, live at 70 West Fifty-fifth Street.

Mr. Hees and his bride will make a wedding journey to China and Japan. He is the President of the Fonda, Johnstown and Gloversville Railroad, and of the National Mohawk River Bank of Fonda, and is a member of the Metropolitan, New York Yacht and Sleepy Hollow Country Club, as well as of various Mohawk Valley clubs.

Kerley—Johnson.

Lieutenant James Hoyt Kerley, Medical Corps, U. S. N. R. F., a nephew of Dr. Charles Gilmore Kerley of this city, and Miss Ethel Rae Johnson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Johnson of Brooklyn and Sound Beach, Conn., were married on Saturday afternoon in St. Bartholomew's Church, by the Rev. F. M. Townley. Lieutenant Kerley, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Kerley of Brooklyn and Upper Red Hook, N. Y., was graduated from Columbia and from the College of Physicians and Surgeons. Only relatives and a few close friends were asked to the wedding and there was no reception.

Engagements.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Lieutenant Clinton Elgin Braine, Jr., U. S. N., of this city to Miss Miriam Maude Ellis, a daughter of the Rev. Paul Ellis and Mrs. Ellis of Ledbury, Hertfordshire, England. The wedding will take place next month. Lieutenant Braine was graduated from Annapolis in 1916, and has recently returned from overseas duty on the U. S. S. Wyoming, which was with the British Grand Fleet.

The engagement is announced of Miss Dorothea Wetherill Walton, a daughter of Mrs. Ernest Foster Walton of Hartsdale, N. Y., to Lieutenant Edmond Tauer Price, athletic director at Camp Dix. Miss Walton will shortly be graduated from Bryn Mawr.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lyon of Brooklyn announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Josephine Lyon, to Frederick Newmark of 215 Audubon Avenue, this city.

Mr. and Mrs. George William Baker of Brooklyn and Fairlawn, Bay Shore, L. I., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Florence Isabelle Baker, to C. Morton Stafford, a son of Mrs. Willis E. Stafford of Flatbush, L. I.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Grace P. Spalding, a daughter of Mrs. J. Eckley Spalding of Rutherford, N. J., to Lieutenant George Gilson Terroberry of Hamilton, Ohio, a descendant of Ezra Cornell. The Lieutenant, who has just been honorably discharged, was graduated from Cornell University in 1915, served with Company A, 7th Regiment, on the Mexican border, and later was instructor at Camp Zachary Taylor.

MANY RARE BOOKS IN H. V. JONES SALE

Collector's Treasures, Including Some Scarce Americana, to be Dispersed.

MILTON'S COPY OF "COMUS"

Autograph of Kipling's Mother, Fugitive Works of Harte and Hearn, and an Early "Forestry."

A dedication copy of the excessively rare first edition of John Milton's "Comus," London, 1637, is included in the books from the library of Herschel V. Jones of The Minneapolis Journal that will be sold at the Anderson Galleries on Jan. 29 and 30. It is entitled "A Maske Presented at Ludlow Castle, 1634, on Michaelmasse Night Before the Right Honorable John Earle of Bridgewater, Vicount Brackly, Lord President of Wales, and One of His Majesties Most Honorable Privie Counsell." The dedication is by Henry Lawes to "John Lord Vicount Brackly, son and heire apparent to the Earle of Bridgewater." In the dedication Lawes says the piece was "not openly acknowledged by its author," and that the publication of it was occasioned by the trouble which he had in making transcripts from the original manuscript to give away to friends.

The present copy is interesting from the fact of having some contemporary corrections made in ink on the margins or between the lines. Young Lord Brackly took the part of the Elder Brother when the piece was first acted before his father on Michaelmas night, 1634. The volume was in the Bridgewater Library from the time of its publication. About the year 1800 it was rebound and the Bridgewater crest impressed upon its sides. The library was preserved intact from early in the seventeenth century until its purchase by Henry E. Huntington last year. "Comus" has always been mentioned among the first of its treasures.

On June 26, 1631, the Earl of Bridgewater was nominated President of the Council of Wales, with an official residence at Ludlow Castle in Shropshire. In 1634 he made his public entrance into the Principality, and an entertainment was held at the castle to celebrate the event. The masque formed part of the entertainment. Henry Lawes, a celebrated composer in England, was asked to write the music for it, and applied to his young friend, Milton, for a text to accompany the music. It is said that Milton never wrote anything more beautiful, more perfect. Three of the Earl's children took part in it, Viscount Brackly, already mentioned; Thomas Egerton, who played the part of the Second Brother, and Lady Alice Egerton, who appeared as The Lady. Lawes played the Attendant Spirit. At the sale of duplicates from Mr. Huntington's library in February, 1918, this copy of "Comus" was bought by George D. Smith for $9,200 and later passed into the possession of Mr. Jones.

Harte, Hawthorne, and Hearn.

An original Bret Harte manuscript, "Three Vagabonds of Trinidad," has many autograph corrections. "The Trimming of Thomas Nashe, Gentleman," London, 1597, is the rare first edition, of which probably not more than two perfect copies are known. The rare first edition of Nathaniel Hawthorne's first book, "Fanshawe," Boston, 1828, is in the original boards. Another Hawthorne item is the first edition of "Peter Parley's Universal History." "The Scenes of Cable's Romances" is the autograph manuscript of Lafcadio Hearn, signed by him. "Sallust," printed in Paris, has the full cast of Henry VIII. on the side panel. The binding is by "G. G.," court binder to the King, Henry VIII., whose bindings are very rare. "The Temple," by George Herbert, Cambridge, 1633, is the rare first edition. "Argumentum Marsilii Ficini" is from the first press in Treviso by the first printer, Gerardus Lisa. It is dated 1471.

"The History of Herodian," London, circa 1550, is the rare first edition. "Hesperides," by Robert Herrick, London, 1648, is one of the masterpieces of English literature, and one of the rarest books to procure in the first edition. "A New Enterlude" called "Thersytes," by Jasper Heywood, London, circa 1550, first edition, is rare, only two other copies being known to exist. John Heywood's "The Spider and the Flie," London, 1556, first edition, is another rarity. Thomas Heywood is represented by rare first editions of "Troia Britannica," London, 1609; "The Golden Age," 1611; "The Silver Age," 1613; "The Fayre Maide of the Exchange," 1625; "England's Elizabeth," 1631; "The Fair Maid of the West," 1631; "London Ius Honorarium," 1631; "The Iron Age," 1632; "A Challenge for Beautie," 1636; "A Curtaine Lecture," 1637; "The Royal King," 1637; "Porta Pietatis," 1638; "The Wise Woman of Hogsdon," 1638, and "The Late Lancashire Witches," 1634, in which he was aided by Richard Broome.

"Sunctus Epistolae" of Saint Hieronymus, Mainz, Peter Schoeffer, 1470, is an undescribed and newly discovered issue. "Vita Epistole," by the same author, is the great art book of Ferrara, printed in 1497. Ranulph Higden's "Polychronycon," Englished by John de Trevisa, Southwerke, 1527, is the first complete edition, and very rare. "Rudimentorum Cosmographicorum," by John Houter, Antwerp, circa 1545, is the earliest schoolbook on geography with atlas. "Amanda," by Nicholas Hookes, London, 1653, first edition, is in perfect condition, surpassing the British Museum copy. "Horae" is a remarkable Franco-Spanish manuscript of the fifteenth century, written on fine vellum. "Royal Book of Hours" is printed on vellum by Verard of France, 1503. Only one other copy is known. "Office of the Virgin Mary" is a manuscript, 1650, with work executed by N. Jarry. "The Disobedient Child," by Thomas Ingeland, London, 1565, is one of the rarest of the pre-Shakespearean comedies, written in rhyme verse. "Book of Legal Writs" 1510, is Richard Pynson's typographical monument.

"The Essays of a Prentise in the Divine Art of Poesie," by James VI. of Scotland, Edinburgh, 1584, is one of the rarest volumes of early poetry. It contains the autograph of Viscountess Falkland. "The Famous Historie of the Seauen Champions of Christendome," by Richard Johnson, London, 1616, is rare. "The Idler," London, 1761, is a presentation copy from Dr. Samuel Johnson. Ben Jonson is represented, among the books, by "Every Man in His Humour," first edition, 1601; the second portion of "King James, His Royal and Magnificent Entertainment," 1604; "Sejanus, His Fall," 1605; "Hymenaei," 1606; his own copy of John Selden's "Jani Anglorum," 1610; "Catiline, His Conspiracy," 1611; "The Alchemist," 1612; "Chloridia," 1630; "Execution Against Vulcan," 1644; "Horace's Art of Poetry," 1640; and "Love's Triumph," written in conjunction with Inigo Jones, 1639.

Among the John Keats items is a presentation copy by him of "Poems," London, 1817, "to his young friend, Wells," and the first issue in original boards of "Endymion" London, 1818. "Imitatio Christi," by Thomas à Kempis, is the editio princeps of this famous work from the press of the first printer at Augsburg, G. Zainer, circa 1470. Rudyard Kipling is represented among other things by "Echoes," circa 1884, with the autograph of his mother, Alice Kipling; "Quartette," 1885, presentation copy by Kipling; first editions of "Departmental Ditties," "Plain Tales from the Hills," "Letters of Marque," "The Five Nations"; presentation copy for the author, and an autograph manuscript of "A Song of St. Valentine," signed "R. K., Lahore, Feb. 14, 1884."

Among the manuscripts are an illuminated Psalter, written at Ghent about 1250; the great Bruges, 1642, Boccaccio manuscript, "De la cas des Nobles Hommes et Femmes"; a sixteenth century manuscript, bound by Clovis Eve, and possibly a gift to Marguerite of Valois, and a Persian manuscript of Shahah's "Garden of Traditionaries."

There are first editions of Milton's "Lycidas," "Of Reformation Touching Church Discipline in England," "Areopagitica," "Poems," "Tetrachordon," "Paradise Lost," "Paradise Regained," and "The History of Britain." "De Dominico Passione," by B. Mombritius, 1474, is from the first press in Milan. "Lalla Rookh," by Thomas Moore, is an extra illustrated copy with autograph letter of the author. There is also an original manuscript of "The Last Rose of Summer," with music. An item of interest is the first edition of Sir Thomas More's "Utopia." Thomas Muffet's "Health's Improvement," London, 1655, is the rare first edition. "The Downfall of Robert, Earl of Huntington, Afterward Called Robin Hood," and "Metropolis Coronata," are rare first editions of Anthony Munday. "Plaine Percevall, the Peace Maker of England," London, circa 1590, is an Elizabethan tract of great rarity. The autograph manuscript of "Lead, Kindly Light" is signed by the author, Cardinal John H. Newman. "The Parliament of Women," London, 1640, is the only copy known. "The Worthie Hystorie of the Moste Noble and Valliant Knight Plaidas," by John Partridge, London, circa 1566, is one of the rarest of volumes.

NEWTON WANTS WOMAN AID.

Attorney General Has a Place for One with Salary of $4,500.

ALBANY, Jan. 19.—A State office paying a salary of $4,500 is awaiting some woman. Attorney General Charles D. DR. WRIGHT MAY REMAIN.

Pastor to Reconsider Resignation from Lenox Avenue Church.

The Rev. Dr. Merle St. Croix Wright, founder and pastor for 31 years of the Lenox Avenue Unitarian Church, Lenox Avenue and 121st Street, who resigned recently, has consented to consider a withdrawal of his resignation. A committee from the congregation visited him several days ago and offered him an indefinite leave of absence with full salary and to engage an assistant pastor if he would consent to remain as pastor. He has notified the committee that under these conditions he will continue to serve the church, provided it is the desire of the congregation. An expression from the congregation is to be had at a meeting to be held at the church tonight.

Dr. Wright said of his resignation at the time: "I took the action simply because I felt that both the church and I needed a change. There has been no friction of any kind; on the other hand, the greatest cordiality exists between the congregation and me."

ZIONISTS RAISE $299,694.

City Contributes $135,000 on First Day of Campaign.

The Zionist Organization of America announced yesterday that the first day of the campaign for a $3,000,000 Palestine Restoration Fund netted $299,694 in cash and pledges. Among the cities that recorded larger contributions were Detroit, Norfolk, Washington, Portsmouth, Va., and Manchester, N. H. This city contributed $135,000. It was said that about 25,000 Zionists here were working for the fund. The local women's committee has established many stations in banks and theatres.

At a dinner at the City Club Saturday night Judge Julian W. Mack, President of the organization, spoke hopefully of the Zionist movement and emphasized the prospect of allied support. At the Hotel McAlpin yesterday the district captains mapped out final plans for their canvass.

KING GEORGE LOSES HIS YOUNGEST SON

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 19. — Prince John, youngest of the five sons of King George, died last night at Sandringham. He had never enjoyed robust health, but no news of his illness had been permitted to come out to interfere with the strenuous work the King and Queen have been lately performing.

Although he was 13 years old, very little had ever been publicly known of Prince John. He got his schooling home and did not appear, like Princes Henry and George, at the festivities in honor of President Wilson.

His death will, of course, put the court into mourning, but it is not expected that the King will permit it to interfere with his duties in these critical times.

LONDON, Jan. 19, (Associated Press.)—The following official bulletin was issued this evening in connection with the death of Prince John:

"Prince John, who since infancy had suffered epileptic fits, which lately had become more frequent and severe, passed away in his sleep following an attack at 5:30 P. M. Saturday."

Prince John was born at Sandringham on July 12, 1905. He was possessed of exuberant spirits, was the prime favorite of all classes, and the idol of the servants and tenants at Windsor. It is said that he was the favorite brother of Princess Mary, who loved to romp with him.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—Owing to the death of Prince John the intended semi-official visit of the Prince of Wales to Paris has been postponed.

PROF. CARPENTER DIES.

Cornell Engineer Put in High-Pressure System Here.

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 19.—Rolla C. Carpenter, Professor of Experimental Engineering at Cornell University since 1895, died at his home here today. He was born in Orion, Mich., in 1852, and had had active charge of many large engineering construction projects. He directed the installation of the high pressure fire system of Baltimore in 1911, and installed a high pressure pumping system in New York in 1912.

He was judge of machinery and transportation at the Chicago Exposition in 1893, the Buffalo Exposition in 1901, and the Jamestown Exposition in 1907. Professor Carpenter was a graduate of the Michigan College of Agriculture and of Michigan University, and was a brother of Justice W. L. Carpenter of the Michigan Supreme Court.

C. H. Schwab, Chicago Pioneer.

CHICAGO, Jan. 19. — Charles H. Schwab, who is dead at the age of 83 years, and who was a figure in the commercial, civic, and philanthropic life of Chicago until he retired from active business twenty years ago, will be buried here tomorrow. Mr. Schwab was a member of the shoe manufacturing firm of Selz, Schwab & Co., and with Harlow N. Higginbotham he directed the World's Fair of 1893, of which he was Vice President. He was City Controller under Carter Harrison, Sr., and he was President of the Chicago Home for Jewish Orphans.

To Keep The People Saving
AN interesting article in The Annalist to-day urges plans to prevent the loss of the great lesson of thrift inculcated in the people of the United States through the Government Liberty Loans. Some project to make the people of the United States keep on saving is earnestly advocated.
A course approved by the heads of several bond houses is the issue of public utility stocks and bonds in denominations small enough to meet the purse of the small buyer. Such action, it is pointed out, would be both patriotic and economical.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

Industry Shows Readjustment Progress.

Evidence that considerable progress has been made in transferring industries from a war to a peace basis is supplied in the divergent opinion of conditions which may be obtained from manufacturers engaged in the same lines. Taking steel as an example, one is informed in some quarters that the lack of new buying orders is rapidly slowing down mill activity, while in others it is said that business is not bad and promises improvement in the near future. The point of view depends largely upon the sort of goods which is in mind when an opinion is formed. Mills which were chiefly engaged in war work are feeling the effect of cancellations and naturally operations are dwindling. The plants whose orders when the armistice was signed covered both war and peace products seem to be fairly well engaged on peace goods, and this helps to offset slackening in work on materials which the Government was formerly taking as rapidly as produced. While new buying of steel is reported to be light, the companies which have on hand an accumulation of peace contracts are working them up and are finding in them a backlog which should assist in tiding over the readjustment period. From producing centres comes word that unemployment in plants where war orders stood in the majority on Nov. 11 has reached a point where workers are considering the voluntary acceptance of wages lower than the current rates, and in this is contained a further sign that the readjustment process is well advanced.

When hostilities ceased few if any producers expected that war prices for goods would continue long. At the same time the advance of producing costs concurrently with the rise of prices had brought about a situation which forecast a gradual decline of the latter. Price recessions have gone to some length, an instance being supplied last week in the reduction of certain textile lines from 25 to 30 per cent. Distributors found that the former quotations would not attract buyers, and so they sought to re-establish their market on a level where it was hoped purchases would be accelerated. It may well be that the movement will have to go further, not only in case of textiles, but also in steel, copper, and other basic materials and finished products, but wages and additional costs are likely to continue as governing factors all the way along. Many far-sighted manufacturers are persuaded that the world shortage of goods is so great that the time is not far away when necessity will overcome objections as to high prices, and it is this belief that is working to bring an increasing concentration of selling plans on the export trade. On the average, it is estimated that the steel industry is engaged to the extent of about 60 per cent. of capacity, and copper production at the mines is being lowered to a 50 per cent. basis. But at 60 per cent. of capacity operations the enlarged steel making facilities are producing probably nearly as great a tonnage as the mills did before the war. If this can be maintained until export business expands and new home demands make their presence felt the state of unemployment should not become as severe as some predictions have indicated as probable, and the industry will be kept in a position to go ahead quickly when the turn comes from sluggish to active purchasing. The copper companies are strong in cash and have so far displayed no intention of quoting markedly lower prices, the evident purpose of the leaders being to wait until buyers come to them. Whether the potential needs of consumers warrant this attitude remains to be seen. It does not tend to promote business for the time being certainly, and there are observers of market conditions who believe that in many lines prices should be allowed to seek a level as soon as possible where business may be stirred up, even though profits for a time fell away rather sharply. A free price movement, it is argued, would be likely to have an early effect and before a close-range conflict with costs occurred.

The managers of railroad properties are reiterating their concern over plans of the Railroad Administration to spend a great deal of money for extensions and improvements in the current year. The Senate Committee engaged on the railroad problem was told by the chief counsel for the Association of Railway Executives last week that a prolonged period of Government control would find the carriers so heavily in debt that their future under private operation would be adversely affected. The railroad men are not opposed to improving the properties—they desired to do a great deal of it before the war emergency arose—but they question the need of a vast and expensive program while costs are as high as at present. It is expected that Director General Hines will ask Congress shortly for an additional $500,000,000 for the revolving fund, the original appropriation of an equal amount being nearly exhausted. The size of the plan for betterments and improvements is emphasized by the recitation of figures. Of the authorized outlay for 1918, amounting to $1,227,000,000, about $588,000,000 was actually spent, and the balance, together with $350,000,000 deemed by the Railroad Administration as necessary for 1919, makes a total of $1,000,000,000 and more to be spent this year. With a big deficit to look back upon as the result of last year's operations of the roads, it seems as though the railroad men are wondering whether earnings in the early future under conditions as yet unknown will cover amply the interest and amortization charges on so vast an outlay, which would be close to three times as much as the roads spent annually for the purposes mentioned in the five years preceding the outbreak of the war. In those years it was admitted that the roads did not spend enough on themselves, being limited in respect to income and credit, excepting several of the well-intrenched concerns. The purpose of the Railroad Administration to improve and extend the major transportation system could hardly be open to criticism, provided that the expense was comparable with a cost of normal periods. The current period is not normal, however, and this fact is what the railroad executives and security owners are studying.

Before March 1 several issues of foreign Government securities are expected to be placed in this country. What the immediate purpose will be is not yet known, although it is realized that funds will be needed to meet maturing obligations. Several of the allied nations have communicated with the Treasury Department and bankers in regard to their necessities. With the war over, it is to be expected that fewer advances will hereafter be made direct by the United States Government to the countries able to finance themselves. As far as corporate financing is concerned, the approach of the Victory Loan campaign is beginning to be felt. In cases where long-term issues were contemplated a few days ago, plans are now centring on notes running from two to five years. The ease of money rates, call funds being plenty last week at 4 to 4½ per cent, and time money at 5¼ to 5½ per cent., indicates that considerable financing may be put through in the next few weeks. The current state of the money market and the size of bank resources were emphasized on Saturday by the fact that the loans of the Clearing House institutions, amounting to $4,800,000,000, established a new high record.

NEXT LOAN THE LAST, GLASS ANNOUNCES

Government Will Sell Bonds After Victory Drive Through Banks Without Campaign.

LOAN PROBABLY IN APRIL

Amount Expected to be About $5,000,000,000—Officials Believe Terms Must Be More Attractive.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Only one more big war loan drive is planned by the Treasury Department, Secretary Glass said today. This will be the Victory Liberty Loan, to be floated probably the last three weeks in April. The amount will not be more than $6,000,000,000, and may be $5,000,000,000.

"I expect the Victory Liberty Loan to be the last intensive campaign for the sale of Government bonds," said Mr. Glass. "Reports that there would be two more bond issues this year, aggregating $12,000,000,000, are entirely without foundation, not only as to amount, but also as regards the number of campaigns."

More bonds probably will be issued by the Government even after the next campaign, but it is planned to market these through banks and other financial institutions, without the usual campaign of advertising and soliciting. The amount of securities to be sold in this manner will not be determined for months, until the Treasury gets a more definite idea of the volume of expenses growing out of liquidating of war contracts, the Allies' needs for further loans, and the demands arising from continuing the policy of making loans to railroads, financing the next wheat crop, continuing shipbuilding, and other internal obligations.

One result of Secretary Glass's announcement that the next intensive loan campaign would be the last is that Liberty Loan organizations throughout the country will make this a big selling point in the campaign. Citizens will be urged to do their utmost on the plea that it probably will be the last opportunity to make loans to the Government for war purposes.

The misapprehension regarding the number and amount of remaining loans may arise, Treasury officials explained today, over the fact that the Treasury had planned to float two loan issues aggregating about $12,000,000,000 this fiscal year. The fiscal year began last July 1, however, and ends next June 30, and the Fourth Liberty Loan of nearly $7,000,000,000 already has been floated in that period.

Most Treasury officials believe that the terms of the fifth, or Victory Loan, will have to be made more attractive than those of the past, either by raising the interest rate about 4¾ per cent. or by some other means.

SAFEGUARDS TRADE IN SALE OF SUPPLIES

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Plans for co-operation between the Government and industry in the sale of surplus Government supplies are being worked out by the Director of Sales of the War Department and the War Service Executive Committee of American Industries.

The War Service Executive Committee, recently named by the new Advisory Council, comprising the Chairmen of the country's nearly 400 war service committees, consists of the members of the Executive Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States with the addition of others to make it more completely representative of the groups of American industry. The members are: Joseph H. Defrees, Chicago, Chairman; E. A. Filene, Boston; A. C. Bedford, New York; W. L. Clause, Pittsburgh; Lewis E. Pierson, New York; R. G. Rhett, Charleston, S. C.; Homer L. Ferguson, Newport News, Va.; Harry A. Black, Galveston, Texas; William Butterworth, Moline, Ill.; L. S. Gillette, Minneapolis; E. T. Meredith, Des Moines; Harry A. Wheeler, Chicago; James R. MacColl, Pawtucket; Charles H. McDowell, Chicago; August H. Vogel, Milwaukee; E. W. Rice, Jr., New York; C. S. Brantingham, Rockford, Ill.; Charles C. Ashbury, Philadelphia; William Ritter, Columbus, Ohio, and James Bell, Minneapolis.

The policy of the Government with respect to the rule of supplies as outlined by C. W. Hare, Director of Sales, will be to consult representatives of the industries concerned whenever sales are to be made in volume likely to disturb trade conditions.

Regarding machine tools of which the War Department may desire to make disposition, Mr. Hare said:

"The following tentative agreement, which is highly satisfactory both to the representatives of the Government and to the trade, has been made:

"1. The inventory of all machine tools and equipment which is being made will be expedited to the greatest possible extent.

"2. As soon as it is known that a quantity of machine tools is available for disposal, the manufacturers of these tools will be given an opportunity to purchase them at a price and on terms of settlement which will be satisfactory to all parties concerned.

"3. In case it is impossible for the manufacturer to purchase his product outright, an effort will be made to arrange for the marketing of the product by the manufacturers in an equitable manner, securing for the Government and the manufacturer alike the best possible terms.

"4. In case both these methods of disposition fail, the material will be offered for sale to the general public in a manner prescribed by law.

"In the settlement of plant contracts which involve the sale of large groups of various kinds of tools and equipment, an effort will be made to prevent the sale or resale of any equipment, as it is realized that great injury could be done by indiscriminate sales of this character."

Another bulletin gives estimates of the amount of building materials the Government has on hand. Accuracy in the estimates, the bulletin sets forth, is not possible, but there is reason to believe the figures do not contain an error larger than 25 per cent. The estimates include: Brick, 14,516,000; hollow tile, 2,235,403 pieces; cement, 115,523 barrels; lime, 77,560 barrels; wood shingles, 908,000.

Coke Production Increased.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Figures on coke production by months in 1918, furnished to the Fuel Administration by the Geological Survey, show an increase in the production of by-product coke of 3,825,720 net tons, or 17 per cent., compared with 1917. Beehive coke production decreased 8 per cent. The output of both kinds of coke was 56,670,000 net tons, compared with 55,006,828 in 1917.

The Net Return

NOT all obligations of corporations having the same interest rate give the same Net Return to the investor.

Thus a bond in the principal amount of $1,000 is often sold to the investor at a discount, say, $960. During the years in which it approaches maturity the price naturally approaches the par value or $1,000. This gradual accretion of $40 combined with the interest payable is termed the "Net Return."

In order to determine this Net Return, prices have been worked out by means of logarithms, in order that the investor might be able by easy reference to ascertain his actual income.

For an illustration take the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Prior Lien 6s due July, 1928. These bonds are now selling at 96%.

Being due in 1928, they have nine and one-half years to run until maturity; the page is turned showing this period at the top. The bonds pay 6% interest; in the sixth column from the left, at the top, is seen 6%. They are selling at 96%; down this column the two nearest prices to 96% are 96.50 and 95.65. By looking in the extreme left-hand column opposite 96.50 it is seen that a bond at this price would give a Net Return of 6½%. In the same way it is ascertained that a bond selling at 95.65 gives a Net Return of 6⅝. The St. Louis-San Francisco Prior Lien 6s, 1928, selling at 96% will yield a Net Return between 6½% and 6⅝%, figuring approximately, 6.55%.

SAYS AMERICA MUST FIND NEW MARKETS

Needed, It Is Held, to Absorb Surplus Production Caused by War Expansion.

WANTS NEW AREAS SETTLED

Guaranty Trust Urges Preparedness for Adjustment to Peace Basis.

The Guaranty Trust Company, in an article on "Adjusting Industry to a New Peace Basis," calls attention to the fact that the American people have outgrown their own market and that the problem confronting industry now is the finding of markets in other countries which will absorb the surplus of production made possible by wartime expansion. Prices, it is held, will not be suddenly reduced, this factor tending to the easier adjustment of industry to a peace basis.

Speaking of prospective markets, the trust company says: "These can be created through the settlement of new areas, which will follow improvements in transportation facilities and in the technique of production. Whatever promotes an increase in the exchange of goods to satisfy new economic wants, in effect, creates new markets for our goods.

"The world's undeveloped area is relatively as large today as the undeveloped area of the United States at the end of the civil war. This has been a world war and has brought people of the various nations together, and our knowledge about the resources and opportunities of various undeveloped lands has been increased. Improvements in transportation facilities of all kinds promise to bring distant lands in effect much nearer to the centres of population.

"Australia, Canada, Great Britain, and other countries are planning to give the returning soldiers liberal grants of public lands for the purpose of inducing them to settle on these lands. Argentina, a country with a large undeveloped area, has, for the first time in her history, adopted a homestead law, modeled upon the homestead law of the United States, which will be an inducement to the people of Southern Europe to settle there, especially in view of the fact that they are quite well acquainted with opportunities in that country. If the various belligerent nations can stimulate the movement of people in such a way as to open up these new areas, the condition of industry during the readjustment period will be fundamentally sound. This will tend to shorten the transition period and to make the long-term expansion period which will follow one of the most important of its kind in the world's history.

Must Finance Our Export Trade.

"The creation of new markets implies that we must finance our export trade. The war has produced such changes in this country that we have the basis for developing an international finance market. Through war financing millions of people for the first time have become bondholders. Many have become holders of foreign bonds. Thus a buying public has been educated, and it may be expected that the public will place a considerable part of their savings into foreign bonds as a means of financing our export trade. The change from a debtor nation of $5,000,000,000 to a creditor nation of $8,000,000,000, together with our large gold holdings, will give an increased ability to participate in world finance. The development of an important merchant marine and a larger carrying trade will give us further facilities as a lending nation. In many instances the investment of capital will precede the development of our foreign trade, so that this is a prime factor in creating new markets as an outlet for our industrial capacity.

"The United States today has considerable unoccupied land which can be utilized for settlement, and during the reconstruction period our Government can and should promote irrigation work in our Western States, undertake reclamation projects in our Southern States, and continue the construction of transportation lines to tap the great plains of Alaska in order to open up additional lands for settlement, as well as to make available great natural resources.

"Greater transportation facilities are absolutely essential in furthering the development of American industry, and while we are making the readjustment to a peace basis we should give considerable attention to the improvement of these facilities on land and sea.

Want Ship Program Increased.

"We ought to continue to expand our shipbuilding program, in order to replace losses of war, and to provide sufficient shipping to meet the needs of enlarged markets which will result from the era of world industrial expansion destined to follow the transition period. The growth of our steel industry, with which many of our shipping plants will be integrated, will probably make it possible for us to build standardized vessels as cheaply as any other nation.

"It is generally recognized that one of the great weaknesses of our railroads has been the lack of adequate terminal facilities, which has resulted in the congestion of traffic and in wasteful use of railway capital. The expansion of our trade will necessitate larger and better port facilities and efforts should be made now to improve them. But we cannot have adequate terminals or transportation facilities without providing sufficient credit for the railroads to expand their facilities to meet the constantly growing commercial needs of the country. Whether this shall be done under Government supervision or Government ownership, it must be done; and there is every reason for believing that the wiser plan would be to accomplish it under private ownership of the carriers, with Government supervision and co-operation."

To the Holders of Five Per Cent. First Mortgage Gold Bonds OF The Northwestern Terminal Railway Company

Issued under the Mortgage indenture dated July 1st, 1906 (and supplements dated September 27th, 1909, and January 2, 1915), made by said Company to The Mercantile Trust Company (now Bankers Trust Company), as Trustee:

The Northwestern Terminal Railway Company (herein called the Terminal Company) has defaulted in the payment of the semi-annual interest due January 1, 1918, July 1, 1918, and January 1, 1919, upon the above issue of bonds. The 1916 and 1917 State taxes upon its property are unpaid and delinquent. We are advised that its terminal railway properties in and near Denver, Colorado, were taken, and now are, under Federal control. All the property of The Denver and Salt Lake Railroad Company (herein called the Salt Lake Company) was placed in a creditor's bill receivership in the District Court of Adams County, Colorado, in August, 1917, and such receivership is still in effect, except that the railway and transportation system of the Salt Lake Company is in Federal control. Under existing agreement whereby the Salt Lake Company occupied and used (and the Federal Railroad Administration is now occupying and using) properties of the Terminal Company, the Salt Lake Company agreed (in effect) to pay, as rental, among other things, the interest upon the Terminal Company's First Mortgage Bonds and taxes upon its property.

The undersigned, holding and representing large amounts of the First Mortgage Bonds of the Terminal Company, believe it to be essential that the holders of such bonds be in a position to take prompt and concerted action for the protection of their interests, and therefore have agreed to act as a committee for that purpose. This Committee is the result of an agreement whereby former committees organized separately, in New York and Denver, have been dissolved, and succeeded by the undersigned.

It will be to the advantage of the Bondholders promptly to deposit their Bonds with the Committee in order to participate in the benefits to be gained by concerted action on the part of the majority of the Bonds. Bondholders are therefore urgently requested to deposit their Bonds, with the January 1, 1918, and subsequent, coupons, on or before March 1st, 1919, with The International Trust Company, Denver, Colorado, the Depositary under an agreement, dated December 18th, 1918, providing for such deposits; or with Bankers Trust Company, 16 Wall Street, New York, the Agent of the Depositary. Transferable certificates of deposit will be issued therefor.

The Committee will promptly pay any interest which may be received by it on the Deposited Bonds to the holders of the certificates of deposit representing the Bonds in respect whereof such payments of interest shall be made, deducting any income tax required to be withheld.

Copies of the Deposit Agreement may be obtained by application either to the Depositary or to its Agent above mentioned.

Dated, Denver, Colorado, January 3, 1919.

ANNUAL REPORT OF

The Mortgage-Bond Company of New York

55 LIBERTY STREET

GEORGE A. HURD, President

January 1, 1919

The sound character of the business done by The Mortgage-Bond Company of New York has been thoroughly tested by the disturbed conditions of the past few years, and the safety of its Bonds is emphasized by contrast with the present status of many other forms of investment. In spite of war conditions, the Company has at the present time only four loans in process of foreclosure out of 2389 loans outstanding, and the amount of interest more than thirty days delinquent is $2,653. This excellent condition is due to the character of the provisions of the Trust Agreement securing its Bonds, which limit the Company's loans to first mortgages on improved residence or business property in selected American cities, and provide many other safeguards with respect to the type of loans accepted.

In addition to $354,500 of New York City mortgages, securing Series 1 Bonds, the Company has $6,983,660.50 of mortgage loans outstanding in nineteen cities of the West and South, where it has established agencies, the value of the properties covered by these mortgages aggregating $17,824,175. The loans, therefore, amount to less than 40% of the Company's appraised value, as compared with the usual loan of 66% of the value in New York City. The great majority of the Company's loans also contain an obligation to make annual payments in reduction of the principal. The average size of the loans made is less than $3,000, this small amount contributing to the safety of the loans through increased salability of the properties, and yielding a better rate of interest than larger mortgages in the same field.

ASSETS		LIABILITIES
Mortgages	$7,338,160.50	Capital	$2,000,000.00
United States Bonds	233,000.00	Surplus	500,000.00
Other Bonds	96,198.00	Undivided Profits	240,861.7[illegible]
Real Estate	102,112.92	Mortgage-Bonds	5,337,900.00
Interest Receivable	151,589.48	Interest Payable	97,721.8[illegible]
Cash	279,472.48	Reserved for Taxes	24,000.00
	$8,200,483.37		$8,200,483.37

Quarterly dividends at the rate of 7% have been paid during the year, and $36,514.58 added to Undivided Profits.

The Mortgage-Bonds of the Company are its direct obligation, and are secured by the deposit of an equal amount of First Mortgages with a Trust Company as Trustee—Series 1 with the Guaranty Trust Company, and Series 2 and Series 3 with the United States Trust Company of New York.

These Bonds are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, and have gradually won recognition from conservative investors, many of the Bonds having been sold to such institutions as Fire and Life Insurance Companies, Trust Companies, Colleges and Universities. Of these bonds, Series 1 and 2, amounting to $2,349,900, bear 4% interest, and Series 3, amounting to $2,988,000, bears 5% interest.

January 1, 1906	$212,800
January 1, 1912	$2,928,200
January 1, 1919	$5,337,900

Gross Income	$521,270.51
Expenses	101,087.93
	$420,182.58
Interest on Bonds	243,668.00
Net Profits	$176,514.58

The Company is organized under the Banking Law of the State of New York and is periodically examined by the Banking Department. It is also audited annually by Messrs. Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths & Company, Accountants and Auditors, of London and New York.

The cities in which the Company now has loans outstanding are:

Atlanta, Ga.	Houston, Texas	Oklahoma City, Okla.
Augusta, Ga.	Jacksonville, Fla.	Portland, Oregon
Birmingham, Ala.	Kansas City, Mo.	San Antonio, Texas
Dallas, Texas	Macon, Ga.	Savannah, Ga.
Des Moines, Iowa	Mobile, Ala.	Seattle, Wash.
Fort Worth, Texas	Montgomery, Ala.	Sioux City, Iowa
	New York, N. Y.	Spokane, Wash.

The Company continues to offer the unsold balance of its 5% 10-20 Year Series 3 Bonds, due January 1, 1932, at a price of 95 and accrued interest, thus netting the investor over 5½%.

ADVERTISING IS AN INVESTMENT

What or Who is an Advertising Agent?

FIRST of all, he is a business counselor who can diagnose your business, weigh the merits of your product, gauge the possible market, know where to find it, and how to create consumer demand.

He will take a product even as prosaic as underwear or as dignified as banking and distinguish it with an idea that will make it renowned. He will garb truth with such originality that he will give the public a new vision—create new desires—establish new needs.

There is as much difference in the skill, wisdom and experience of Advertising Agents as there is in any other profession. Therefore it pays to select your Agent with that searching discrimination we invite.

Notice to Executives

Many concerns and individuals overpaid their Income Tax last year, due in many cases to lack of time to apply the many features and interpretations of the Tax Law to their particular business.

Let us go over your problems now and have time to study the fine points and be prepared to take advantage of all allowable deductions you are entitled to. Figures are compiled by Certified Public Accountants, reports prepared by Tax Experts, and legal matters passed upon by well known authorities. Charges are moderate. Inquiries invited.

MONON COAL COMPANY.
FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND 5% GOLD BONDS.

The undersigned, as Sinking-Fund Trustee under the First Mortgage of MONON COAL COMPANY to BANKERS TRUST COMPANY and SCOTT BROWN, as Trustees, dated May 19, 1911, securing the above bonds, hereby gives notice that it will purchase bonds of the above issue for the Sinking Fund to the extent of $2,959.57, being the amount of cash in its hands for that purpose, at the lowest price for which such bonds (bearing all unpaid coupons) shall be offered to it, and that in respect thereof the undersigned will receive sealed proposals for the sale of such bonds at its office, No. 16 Wall Street, New York City, up to the close of business January 25, 1919. No offer will be accepted at a price exceeding the face value of principal of the bonds offered. In case bonds shall be offered by two or more holders at the same price, to an amount in the aggregate exceeding the cash sinking fund applicable thereto, acceptance of such offers will be made in the order of the date of receipt thereof, and if such equal offers of two or more holders be received at the same time, then each will be accepted to an amount which shall bear to such offer substantially the same proportion as such cash sinking fund shall bear to the aggregate of such simultaneous equal offers.

BANKERS TRUST COMPANY,
Sinking-Fund Trustee.
H. F. WILSON, Jr., Vice President.
January 13, 1919.

Cumberland Street Railway Company. The bonds of the above-named company, due October 1, 1918, will be exchanged for First Mortgage 4% Gold Bonds of the Rhode Island Suburban Railway Company, due January 1, 1950, at the office of the Controller of the Rhode Island Company, 100 Fountain St., Providence, R. I.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SYRACUSE, located at Syracuse, in the State of New York, is closing its affairs. All note holders and other creditors of the Association are, therefore, hereby notified to present the notes and other claims for payment.
A. W. HUDSON, President.
Dated December 21, 1918.

MEETINGS AND ELECTIONS.

THE HOCKING VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.
NOTICE OF SPECIAL STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

Notice is hereby given that a Special Meeting of the Stockholders of THE HOCKING VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY has been called by the Board of Directors of said Company to be held at the principal office of the Company in the City of Columbus, Ohio, on Saturday the 25th day of January, 1919, at eleven o'clock A. M., for the following purposes:

(a) To authorize the Board of Directors or the Executive Committee of the Company to negotiate and cause to be executed and delivered such contract with the President of the United States, the Director General of Railroads, or such other person as the President may direct, as said Board or said Executive Committee shall deem expedient, relating to the compensation to be paid for the possession, use and control of the railroad and system of transportation and appurtenances thereof of the Company, the operation, maintenance and return thereof, and to any other matter connected with or growing out of the taking over by the President of said properties; to alter, amend or add to such contract, by mutual consent to be signified on behalf of the Company by vote of its Board of Directors or Executive Committee; to collect the aggregate compensation to be paid under such contract; and generally to take such action as said Board or Committee shall deem necessary to secure, either by such contract or otherwise, adequate compensation for, and proper maintenance and a timely return of, the property so taken over;

(b) To consent to, approve and authorize the creation and issue of mortgage bonds of the Company to be limited to a principal amount, in United States Gold Coin, of not exceeding $50,000,000 at any one time outstanding; such bonds to mature at such date or dates, to bear interest from such date or dates and at such rate or rates, to be issuable for such purposes and in such denominations, and to be in such form and to contain such terms and provisions, including provision for conversion of any or all such bonds into stock of the Company, as the Board of Directors or the Executive Committee of the Company may determine;

(c) To consent to, approve and authorize the execution and delivery, to secure such bonds, of a mortgage and deed of trust on and of all or any part of the railroads, equipment, franchises and property, including corporate stocks and obligations, owned by the Company at the date of the execution and delivery of such mortgage and deed of trust or at any time thereafter acquired by it;

(d) To approve, or to authorize the Board of Directors of the Company in its discretion to determine, the form and terms of such mortgage and deed of trust, and the property of the Company to be embraced therein;

(e) To ratify and confirm, and to authorize and consent to, any action theretofore taken or authorized by said Board of Directors or by the Executive Committee of the Company, which may be submitted to the meeting, whether for the purposes of, or in connection with, or in contemplation of, any of the matters aforesaid or otherwise;

(f) To transact such other business as may be brought before the meeting.

The stock transfer books of the Company will be closed for the meeting on Thursday the 26th day of December, 1918, at three o'clock P. M., and will be reopened on Monday, the 27th day of January, 1919, at ten o'clock A. M.

Dated, Columbus, Ohio, December 16th, 1918.

By order of the Board of Directors.
A. TREVVETT, Secretary.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the CHARLES R. BYRON COMPANY will be held at the office of the Company, 293 Seventh Avenue, New York City, on Monday, January 27, 1919, at 3 P. M.
JOHN J. CORCORAN, Secretary.

MERCHANDISE EXECUTIVE

Who has had experience that will enable him to manage the merchandising of one of the largest Department Stores in this country is offered an opportunity of a lifetime.

My client's business has been steadily increasing for the past seven years. There are probably only a very few men in this country who could successfully fill this position; and my client wants one of them.

Write me of your qualifications and if you "measure up," I will arrange for an interview with my principals.

Your communication will be held in the strictest confidence. Address all communications B 232 Times.

NO FEDERAL BAR TO BUILDING LOANS

DEALERS ABSORB ADVANCES

Query in All Material Sectors Shows Quick Transition in Builders' Favor.

Restraint heretofore felt by mortgage interests and lending institutions in the matter of freely making loans on building operations has been officially removed.

Simultaneous with a formal declaration from Felix Frankfurter, assistant to William B. Wilson, Secretary of the Department of Labor, to the effect that the Federal Reserve Board and all affiliated Government authorities are now bending every effort to encourage building construction, including the flotation of loans on private and public construction projects, reports were made accessible last week from the leading building trade associations of the eastern section of the country regarding the steps that have been taken or are to be taken to clarify the misunderstandings that have heretofore prevailed with respect to giving full freedom to building enterprises.

Secretary Glass of the Treasury Department strangled at once the general idea that the banks, trust companies, savings institutions, and lending interests of various sorts would be the primary source of flotation of the next Liberty loan, by stating that the public will be just as ready patriotically to absorb that loan as it was to subscribe to others.

This was the first factor that put the lending inerests at ease. Supplementing this statement was one from the Assistant Secretary of the Department of Labor, which said:

As far as the Department of Labor is concerned, we are making every effort to stimulate the development of necessary public works by the States and cities during 1919. We shall shortly know the programs of 500 cities. We can already estimate that the amount of public work will be valued well above the normal amount of $600,000,000 per annum, and we have every confidence that both public and private work will go forward in large volume.

"Furthermore, it is the definite policy of the Government, as announced in the President's message and as followed by all departments, to set in motion all the necessary public work in order to supply some substitute for the large Government orders which have been canceled.

"On behalf of the Secretary of Labor, I hope you will bring home to the building trade his desire to assist it in any way in his power, and that the industry will feel able to do its part in providing employment for large numbers of returning soldiers and former war workers in 1919."

As an evidence of the disposition of the building interests of the country to do their part, the building material distributers of New York on Saturday voluntarily cut the price of Portland cement 20 cents a barrel, delivered on the job, although no cut whatever was made in wholesale quotations. The hydrated lime manufacturers advanced the price of their commodity a dollar a ton, but, in line with the general determination to keep the building material market stable, no change has been made, nor is likely to be made, in the delivered price of this commodity.

Common brick interests, with an improved demand and practically no stocks on dealers' hands, have resolutely determined to keep the wholesale price at the present $15 level, despite pressure from some quarters toward the week-end to advance prices to higher levels. The largest producers of Pennsylvania roofing slate have adopted a new stabilizing price basis, and distributers have made their new lists to conform to this new schedule.

Even in lumber there is a distinct tendency to give equilibrium to the consumer. On a quick survey of 179 lumber mills reporting to the Southern Pine Association and made available Saturday to the Dow Service, it was revealed that stabilization may be expected in that line, even at the cost of decided shrinkage of profits. Exclusive of interest and stumpage the average cost of handling lumber from forest to car was $10.94 a thousand feet in April last year, as against a cost of $23.96 in October last. Today $30 buys $20 lumber, but until the cost of labor for handling at the mill is made lower than $10 per thousand feet; until the lighterage charge of $2 to $3 is removed by restoring the free lighterage system prevailing in this harbor before the war; until the high freight rates of $3 to $7 a thousand feet is reduced by supplementing war time rates for peace time tariffs, and until the cost of handling at retail yards is returned to the prewar levels instead of the $12 to $15 per thousand feet costs now prevailing, any reduction in price to the consumer must come out of the profits of the dealer, who, in order to co-operate in the general price conciliation that is being made in every department so as to get construction work started, is now operating at cost, and, in some cases, below it.

Official word came to building material and financial interests from Washington last week that the quantities of available building materials on hand, due to cancellation of war construction contracts, are not to be distributed so as to upset market conditions, and that instead of being thrown broadcast upon the building market, as many had hoped, thereby to obtain building material cheap, they are being rapidly absorbed into other Federal departments for Government construction work.

In addition, the statement was made that the amount of these stocks, with the exception of lumber, is very small. Thus was removed one of the most important factors in holding back construction, the hope that tremendous quantities of building materials were soon to be dumped upon the market below market prices.

Other building material stabilizing movements last week, according to the Dow Service Daily Building Reports, were a recasting of concrete bar prices so that specifications for any favorable quantity could be closed at $2.70 to $2.75. One of the great plumbing supply houses showed lower prices on certain catalogues, bringing quotations in line with those of other manufacturers. Hot air registers dropped 25 per cent.; tarred felt showed a 50-cent per hundredweight concession; Portland cement delivered at job, Manhattan, Bronx, Brooklyn, or Queens was cut by dealers from $4 a barrel to $3.80; electrical porcelains face another drop of from 5 to 10 per cent., and desirable rubber-covered wire is now obtainable at lower levels. Changes have been made in pipe discounts in favor of the consumer.

The delivered price system of quotation recently adopted in New York was established for Newark and vicinity, thereby facilitating estimating by the layman on his prospective building operations.

The Portland cement industry shows the first reflection of this unprecedented turnabout in construction economics, which has been as unexpected to the trade as it is to the consumer. In the midst of Winter, the fifteen-day shipment out of the Lehigh Valley districts, shows only a 4 per cent. difference under that of the same period last year, with some companies showing a very great individual gain in actual sales, amounting in some cases to almost double the business taken during war time a year ago, thus indicating with the decided improvement in common brick inquiry that a change for the better is under way.

BANKRUPTCY SALES.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, Southern District of New York.—In Bankruptcy.—No. 26,459.—In the Matter of STRAIGHT EDGE BAKING COMPANY, Bankrupt.
Notice is hereby given that pursuant to an order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York the undersigned, Arthur Y. Dalziel, Receiver in Bankruptcy of Straight Edge Baking Company, offers for sale the property, assets and effects of the said bankrupt.
The property to be sold consists of the following: Office fixtures, baking utensils, machinery, fixtures and equipment, located at Nos. 100, 102 and 104 Lawrence Street, Manhattan, New York City, inventory of which can be seen at the premises, together with the right, title and interest of the bankrupt in and to the good will of the business and in and to the unexpired term of the lease and the option to purchase the said real property, and the right, title and interest of the bankrupt in and to two Duhrkop Patent ovens installed at said premises, which are subject to an alleged lien of $1,151.00 and interest from August 15, 1918, also 1 cake mixing machine and motor, subject to an alleged lien of $44.15, with interest from April 15, 1918, and one Steel revolving oven located at 209 Greenwich Street, Manhattan, New York City.
The above described property may be inspected on the premises from January 15, 1919, to January 20, 1919, between the hours of 10 A. M. and 4 P. M.
Sealed bids for the above described property, assets and effects as an entirety or exclusive of the unexpired term of the lease and the option to purchase said premises may be submitted to the Receiver at the office of the Referee herein, Seaman Miller, Esq., 2 Rector Street, Manhattan, New York City, on or before 3 o'clock P. M. on January 29, 1919, at which time and place the bids will be opened by him, and creditors may attend and express themselves in reference thereto. Each bid must be accompanied by a certified check or cash for at least ten per cent. (10%) of the amount of the bid, and must specify whether the bid is made for the entire assets and effects or is made exclusive of the unexpired term of the lease and the option to purchase said premises.
The Receiver reserves the right to reject any or all bids, in which event the said property will be sold at public auction on the premises by Charles Shongood, auctioneer, on January 23, 1919, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.
Dated, New York, January 18th, 1919.

SUPREME COURT, COUNTY OF NEW YORK.—JAMES YOUNG BRUSH, Plaintiff, against CHARLES A. ACKERMAN, individually and as Executor of and under the last Will and Testament of CHARLOTTE Y. ACKERMAN, deceased, defendant.—County Clerk's Index No. 20288-1918.

In pursuance of an interlocutory judgment of partition and sale duly made and entered in the above entitled action and bearing date the 29th day of November, 1918, I, the undersigned, the referee named in said interlocutory judgment, will sell at public auction, at the Exchange Salesroom, Nos. 14-16 Vesey Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, City and County of New York, on the 21st day of January, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by JOSEPH P. DAY, Auctioneer, the premises directed by said interlocutory judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:

(Parcel No. 1.)

All that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land with the buildings and improvements thereon erected situate, lying, and being in the Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, and known and distinguished as lot number 920 on a map of the Bloomingdale tract made by J. F. Bridges and dated October, 1826, on file in the office of the Register of the County of New York, and which is bounded and described as follows:

BEGINNING at a point in the northerly line of Eighty-second Street distant three hundred and fifty feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Eleventh Avenue and Eighty-second Street, and running thence northerly and parallel to Eleventh Avenue one hundred and two feet two inches to the centre line of the block, thence westerly along said centre line of the block and parallel to Eighty-second Street twenty-five feet, thence southerly and parallel to Eleventh Avenue one hundred and two feet and two inches to the northerly line of Eighty-second Street, and thence easterly and along the said northerly line of Eighty-second Street twenty-five feet to the place of beginning. (Said premises being known as and by street number 331 West 82nd Street.)

All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, and bounded and described as follows:

BEGINNING at a point on the northerly side of Eighty-second Street distant three hundred and seventy-five feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Eighty-second Street and West End Avenue and running thence northerly parallel with West End Avenue seventy feet, thence westerly parallel with Eighty-second Street twelve feet, thence southerly parallel with West End Avenue fifteen feet, thence westerly parallel with Eighty-second Street twenty-six feet five inches more or less to the easterly side of Riverside Drive, thence southerly along the easterly side of Riverside Drive sixty feet four and three-quarter inches more or less to the northeasterly corner of said Riverside Drive and Eighty-second Street, and thence easterly along the northerly side of Eighty-second Street thirteen feet four and three-quarter inches to the point or place of beginning. (Said premises being a vacant lot adjoining Parcel No. 1, above described.)

(Parcel No. 3.)

All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land with the buildings and improvements thereon erected situate, lying and being in the Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, and bounded and described as follows:

BEGINNING at a point on the southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street distant one hundred and forty-one feet eight inches in a southeasterly direction from the southeasterly corner of Twenty-fourth Street and Eighth Avenue, and running thence southeasterly along the said southerly line of Twenty-fourth Street sixteen feet eight inches, thence southwesterly at right angles to Twenty-fourth Street ninety-eight feet nine inches to the centre line of the block between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-third Streets, thence northwesterly along the centre line of said block and parallel with Twenty-fourth Street sixteen feet eight inches, and thence northeasterly and parallel with Eighth Avenue ninety-eight feet nine inches to the place of beginning. (Said premises being known as and by street number 260 West 24th Street.)

(Parcel No. 4.)

All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land with the buildings and improvements thereon erected situate, lying and being in the Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, known and designated on a certain Map of Property belonging to the estate of Abraham Child, deceased, filed in the office of the Register of the County of New York as Map number two of said estate by the number 44 and bounded and described as follows:

COMMENCING at a point on the easterly side of Seventh Avenue distant seventy-four feet northerly from the northeasterly corner of the Seventh Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street, thence running easterly and parallel with Twenty-eighth Street ninety-nine and three-fourths feet, thence northerly on a line nearly parallel with the Seventh Avenue twenty-four and two-thirds feet, thence westerly parallel with Twenty-eighth Street ninety-nine and one-third feet to the Seventh Avenue aforesaid, and thence southerly along the easterly side of Seventh Avenue twenty-four and two-thirds feet to the place of beginning, be the said several dimensions more or less. The said premises being now known as number 327 Seventh Avenue in the City of New York.

(Parcel No. 5.)

All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land together with the buildings and improvements thereon erected situate, lying and being in the Borough of Manhattan, City, County and State of New York, known and distinguished on a map entitled Map No. 2 of lands in the Sixteenth Ward of the City of New York belonging to the estate of the late Henry Eckford, deceased, New York, December 17th, 1847, laid out into lots by Edwin Smith, City Surveyor, and filed in the office of the Register of the County of New York on the 24th day of January, 1848, by the number Forty-five (45), bounded southerly in front by Thirty-third Street, westerly by lot designated on the said map as number Forty-four (44), and easterly by land heretofore of Thomas Gardner. (Said premises being known as and by street number 135 West 33rd Street.)

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The remarkable feature of the weather map of Sunday night is the abnormally warm weather that prevails in practically all parts of the country, the temperature being 20 to 30 degrees or more above the normal over all the Northwestern States, and 10 degrees or more above normal throughout the great central valleys and the interior of the South.

During the last twenty-four hours there were general and heavy rains in the Pacific States except Southern California, and light rains and snows in Northern New England and Northern New York.

Fair weather prevailed elsewhere.

The indications are that the weather will be fair Monday and Tuesday generally east of the Mississippi River.

There are no prospects of decidedly colder weather over the eastern half of the country during the next two or three days.

WINDS FOR MONDAY AND TUESDAY.

FORECAST—TODAY AND TUESDAY.

Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey—Fair Monday and Tuesday; mild temperature.

Western Pennsylvania, Western New York—Fair and somewhat warmer Monday; Tuesday fair.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at 11 P. M. taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

3 A. M.	25	38	4 P. M.	19	43
6 A. M.	24	39	6 P. M.	17	39
9 A. M.	21	40	9 P. M.	14	36
12 M.	20	44	11 P. M.	11	35

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 40; for the corresponding date last year it was 18; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 30. The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 40, at 8 P. M. it was 37. Maximum temperature 45 degrees at 2 P. M.; minimum 36 degrees at 12:05 A. M. Humidity 59 per cent. at 8 A. M., 64 per cent. at 8 P. M. The barometer at 8 A. M. yesterday registered 29.83 inches; at 8 P. M. it stood at 30.09 inches.

SHONTS EXPLAINS INCREASE IN COSTS

$2,000,000 MORE FOR COAL

Steel Rails, He Declares, from $30 a Ton Have Advanced to $80 and $90.

Recent testimony before the Public Service Commission by Theodore P. Shonts, President of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company and the New York Railways Company, related to increased costs in operating the two lines. Mr. Shonts was questioned by various members of the commission, by Corporation Counsel Burr, Godfrey Goldmark, the commission's chief counsel, and by James L. Quackenbush, general counsel for the companies. Some of the testimony follows:

Mr. Burr—The conditions of the Railways Company are not attributable to the war? A.—Yes, they are.

Mr. Burr—They have existed for many years? A.—If you will permit me: When we took the property over from the receiver, on Jan. 1, 1912, we made yearly progress; each year we improved the physical condition of the property and each year our earnings grew, until the last year before the war, when we had, for the first time, earned all fixed charges. Mind you, this after paying $1,100,000 a year in franchise taxes to the city. We had paid, besides our operating expenses, our rentals and our 4 per cent. bonds, and earned in addition the 5 per cent. bonds.

Q—You never paid any dividend upon the stock? A—No, but the net result, after improving the physical condition of the property, was that we did earn the full income upon the 5's and had the full ratio of moneys paid for equipment, and the next year could have earned the full 5 per cent upon the stock. Then came the war and the additional expenses. I attribute all our troubles to the war.

Answering "yes" to a question as to whether he had negotiated the Interborough's contract with the city for the dual system, Mr. Shonts replied to other questions by saying that he had engaged the best talent available in the country to look after the Interborough's interests in the making of the contract. Replying to another question he said that all of the company's estimates were more than sufficient until America entered the war. Asked to state definitely the present situation of the company Mr. Shonts replied that he would offer an illustration, but Mr. Burr interposed as follows:

"I have an illustration, and if it meets yours it will clear up the situation. For instance, you people have obtained from this body (the Public Service Commission) leave to issue bonds necessary to pay for the $22,000,000 additional equipment which you never thought you would have to pay for and which was secured by certain notes. This payment was made necessary because of war prices?" A—Yes.

After calling attention to the fact that the contract with the city was made in 1913, and that some of the contracts for equipment were made as late as 1917 and 1918, Mr. Burr asked:

"Why hadn't you made the contract for these things which it was inevitable had to be supplied in 1915, when prices were normal?" A.—In many things we did, but we could not in all.

Commissioner Whitney—I think both of you are going on a misapprehension that the $22,000,000 additional was due entirely to increased prices. As I recall the evidence in the bond cases, the equipment was mainly due to extra cost because of an enlargement of the quantity.

Mr. Shonts explained that he was just going to give that as a reason for not making earlier contracts. Then, for the purpose of further illustration, Mr. Shonts added that:

"There were several lines of new tracks, many of them not contemplated in April, 1913, when the contracts were signed. If one picks up our reports and sees operating expense 44-45 per cent. and then in three or four months sees that it has gone to 61 per cent. he will say, 'There is something wrong. What is the matter here?' I have seen in friendly newspaper articles not the suggestion of bad faith, but that an explanation would be welcomed. Well, this is the explanation:

"It is always our policy when times are dull and business is slack and prices low to make long-term contracts. It is never our policy to make them in boom times. Back in 1915, when prices were low and times were dull I made, for instance, a three-year contract for coal. I tried to get a contract for five years, but could not, and compromised by making it three years. It cost then $3.23 a ton, as compared with $3.28 in the previous contract. I guess that contract cost the contractors $10,000,000, as compare with normal prices before the contract expired. We have big contracts for brake shoes; we have contracts for steel rails, some at $30 a ton.

Mr. Quackenbush—I suggest that you mention the present prices of coal and steel rails.

Mr. Shonts—We are paying $6.07 a ton for coal.

Commissioner Hervey—What difference does that make in the cost to you in dollars and cents, a million or two million? A.—About 750,000 tons a year, at a difference of almost $3 a ton would make over $2,000,000. Brake shoes have increased about 150 per cent., and steel rails have grown from $30 to $80 and $90 a ton. Some of the rails last year were $120 a ton. That is on top of $2,000,000 for coal. Our old contracts began to run out in April last year. On Aug. 1 we increased wages $2,500,000. There are probably five or six million dollars of increased costs coming in from early last Summer down to the present time.

Mr. Burr asked if the contract the company had with the city was not the most profitable contract in the world, barring the increased costs due to the war, and Mr. Shonts replied:

"I do not know about the world, that is a large proposition. The contract was made when nobody could foresee the world war. We did not know the Government, with the taxing power behind it, would enter the market and take away men and materials at any prices they saw fit to pay, which was its duty to do. Our estimates with the city were on a basis that we would not earn our preferentials by between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000. Our studies were all conservative under normal conditions."

Mr. Shonts said that while the war had ended its results were still going on.

Mr. Quackenbush—You mean by that that these prices will continue? A.—Labor never will go back, and I hope it never will.

Travis H. Whitney, Acting Chairman of the Public Service Commission, spoke upon the problems of the rapid transit system at the Free Synagogue Forum, at 36 West Sixty-eighth Street, last night. He outlined plans for expansion and completion of lines already started, and expressed the opinion that any discussion of the problems ought not to occur in secret, but in public, with the fullest publicity possible.

Mr. Whitney spoke of the plea for increased fares and said that no one could foretell the condition of finance, labor, employment, materials or other conditions bearing upon this demand. Forcing of the transit companies into receiverships here, he said, would have a vital and far-reaching effect throughout the country, so that any readjustment ought to be made with the greatest care. He reminded a questioner that the decision in the Rochester fare case was that the municipal boards governing transit facilities constituted the only power for amending maximum fare stipulated in franchises or charters. Replying to a question as to why the Public Service Commission and the Board of Estimate did not get together as to fares and other problems the Commissioner said: "This is the Sabbath."

ROCKEFELLER ON THE FLAG.

Tells Bible Class of Patriotic Duty Toward Symbol of Liberty.

At the regular session of the Men's Bible Class of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church yesterday morning John D. Rockefeller, Jr., leader of the class, addressed his audience upon the meaning of the Passover.

"Men are selected for great tasks," said Mr. Rockefeller, "because of their special fitness, and in God's selection of Moses for the task of leading the children of Israel out of the wilderness there must have been a wonderful divine faith in the qualifications of the man upon whom this unparalleled honor fell. That Moses did not fail is only another evidence that we continually have of the infallibility of God.

"The question is, have we of today the same faith in our ability to perform the tasks that are set for us as had Moses in himself. We may not have great place to fill, but are we doing, in our humble way, what we should do; all that we should do. We must not fail, or the whole fabric of civilized life will fall, for the fabric cannot be kept intact if there are broken threads here and there.

"Take, for example, what we owe to our Government, to society, to our country. What is the flag itself—nothing but stars and stripes. It has little or no intrinsic value, but it is a great symbol that we may live and have our liberty today, therefore we defend it with our lives, for it means our lives, our happiness, our liberty. When I think of what it means I am reminded of the little French peasant girl who was carrying against her bosom the tricolor of her country. A soldier offered to buy it for five francs, a tremendous sum to that poor child, but she shook her head. The man increased his offer to ten francs. Grasping the flag closer, she said to him: 'You do not understand. It is not the flag that I refuse to sell you, but it is my heart that you would buy. That is beyond price.'"

VANDERBILT TO QUIT ARMY.

Hopes to Enter West Point After Discharge.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMP UPTON, L. I., Jan. 19.—Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., arrived here today to await discharge from the service. Dressed in regulation uniform he drove to camp from New York in a racing automobile labeled "Headquarters, Thirteenth Division," in which he made two records while serving as a dispatch driver. He says he will take up hard study in the hope of entering West Point next year.

Young Vanderbilt enlisted in the headquarters troop of the Twenty-seventh Division in July, 1917, and went to Spartanburg. He was preparing to enter Yale at the time of his enlistment. He went abroad with the unit as General O'Ryan's motor driver and was assigned to drive General Pershing and General Haig. He returned to this country last August as a transportation instructor. His commission as a transportation officer was signed the day the armistice became effective and then declared void. He has been giving transportation instructions at American Lake, Wash., and got a thirty-day furlough on Dec. 20. He came on to New York and on Saturday received an order to come here to await discharge.

Vanderbilt came to camp in the car in which he won a race between Government service automobiles at Sheepshead Bay and the cross-country run made by twenty-six Government machines between Spartanburg and New York. He made as high as 102 miles an hour and covered the 1,010 miles in 35 hours 25 minutes.

Waldon Williams Leaves $590,205.

Transfer Tax Appraiser William C. Clark of Mount Vernon filed his appraisal on Saturday of the estate of the late Waldon Williams, a New York man, who died at his country home, "Stone House," on Kirby Lane, Rye, on the Sound, which shows that the total value of his estate in this State subject to taxation is $590,205.60. Mr. Williams owned stock of various corporations and bonds aggregating in value $418,180.60. His realty was appraised at $172,025. The expenses of administration, debts, and commissions and funeral expenses amounted to $128,452.90, which leaves the amount transferred as $453,712.70. The major part of the estate is inherited by the widow.

ASKS FOR INQUIRY INTO HEALTH BOARD

Rabbi Goldstein Charges That "Splendid Organization Is Rapidly Disintegrating."

BLAMES 'POLITICAL CLIQUE'

Suggestion May Be Taken Up at Conference of Civic Bodies This Afternoon.

Charging that "the splendid organization and machinery built by previous Health Commissioners is rapidly disintegrating, and that the whole Health Department is speedily approaching a state of demoralization and ineffectiveness, Rabbi Sidney E. Goldstein, in his sermon in the Free Synagogue yesterday, urged that the citizens of New York demand an open and impartial investigation of the Health Department.

Dr. Goldstein suggested that the citizens reques. the Committee of Public Health of the Academy of Medicine, which, he said, is familiar with the work of the Health Department, to make the investigation, inviting to serve with it experts on public health and social welfare.

It was said last night that this suggestion may be taken up this afternoon at the conference of civic, social welfare, and labor organizations called by the Woman's Municipal League, in the Murray Hill Hotel to discuss the action of Health Commissioner Copeland in recently withdrawing the Division of Industrial Hygiene from the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, of which Dr. Louis I. Harris is Director.

Judge Charles M. Hough of the Federal Court will preside at the meeting. Among the other speakers will be Florence Kelley of the National Consumers' League, Rose Schneiderman of the Women's Trade Union League, and James J. Bagley of Franklin Union No. 23.

"Nothing Less Than Ominous."

"The act of the Commissioner of Health in removing the Division of Industrial Hygiene from the Bureau of Preventable Diseases is serious enough in itself," said Rabbi Goldstein in his sermon. "It is more serious and nothing less than ominous, viewed as a symptom of what is taking place, we are informed, in the department as a whole. Rumors are reaching us from authoritative sources that the splendid organization and machinery built up by previous Health Commissioners is rapidly disintegrating and that the whole department is speedily approaching a state of demoralization and ineffectiveness.

"We are told that the political clique now in control of the city, having failed in its direct frontal attack of a few months ago, have determined to accomplish their object through new indirect and subterranean methods. There seems good reason to believe that this great fundamental instrumentality for communal service is being prostituted to political purposes, that pre-election promises of patronage are to be fulfilled, in spite of every protest, at the expense of the health of the citizens of New York.

"The measure of truth in these rumors, suspicions and beliefs, we do not know exactly, but we have a right to know. The citizens of New York have a right to know the facts and to decide whether the changes that are taking place and the program that is being adopted are all in the interest of the welfare of the city. The facts cannot be learned from the smoothly written and beautifully edited communications of the Commissioner of Health.

"The Commissioner is still probably of the opinion that we have had no epidemic in this city in spite of the fact that his own records prove that we have had over 26,000 deaths from influenza and pneumonia since the middle of last September, and that the records indicate that over 1,000,000 men and women and children have been affected up to date.

"There is only one certain way to reach the truth and to reassure the mind of the community. The citizens of New York should and must demand an open and impartial investigation of the Department of Health. In this city we have an Academy of Medicine in which there is a Committee on Public Health that is familiar with the past and present work of the department.

Suggests Names of Experts.

"This is the body that we should commission to make the investigation and to report back to the citizens of the community. This committee could, if it deemed it wise, invite to serve with it such experts in public health as Dr. James Alexander Miller, Dr. S. S. Goldwater, and such experts in social service as Dr. Edward T. Devine and Dr. Lee K. Frankel.

"The time to demand this investigation is now. We cannot afford to wait for further evidence, for the issue involves not money and merchandise but the life and welfare of over 5,000,000 men, women, and little children. A month or three months hence we may still be able to save the Department of Health, but we shall not be able to restore to life those who have been lost through indifference, inefficiency, and the sublimated arrogance that now controls the affairs of the City of New York. We propose to make the demand for an impartial inquiry, and we hope other bodies will take it up."

In a resolution adopted by the Governing Board of the Consumers' League of New York City, made public yesterday, it was recited that in view of the fact that the Federal Health Service is urging city health departments throughout the country to establish divisions of Industrial hygiene modeled on the New York Division and that "to put this division under an inexperienced man is the opening wedge which may lead to the final abolition of the division," the league "emphatically protests to Commissioner Copeland and Mayor Hylan against this proposed change and registers its hearty disapproval of such action."

The resolution further said that the withdrawal of the division from Dr. Harris and the placing it under Dr. S. Dana Hubbard "takes on the nature of a political attack on the integrity of the Health Department such as was made last Spring and was repudiated by popular indignation."

To Show Airplane's Part in War.

The public will have an opportunity for the first time of seeing every tpye of aircraft of the United States and its Allies, together with those of the enemy, at the semi-official Army and Navy Aeronautic Exposition, which will be held in this city from Feb. 27 to March 6. Because of the size of the undertaking, the exhibition will be held in two places—Madison Square Garden and the 69th Regiment Armory.

According to the plans made public yesterday, every detail of the part aviation played in winning the war will be shown. Demonstrations of the wireless telephone, camera gun, and bomb dropping will be given.

Military and Patriotic Bodies Support Citizens' Committee.

The Independent Citizens' Committee, organized as a protest against the appointment of William Randolph Hearst as a member of the Mayor's Committee to Welcome the Homecoming Soldiers, announced yesterday that the 307th Regimental Family Unit, the Army and Navy Club, the Association of the 11th Regiment of Engineers, and several other military and patriotic organizations had offered their assistance in giving the returning soldiers a patriotic welcome. The following extracts from letters were given out by the committee yesterday:

New York Browning Society.—By a vote of our society we wish to affiliate with the Independent Committee in welcoming the returning men.

New York City Colony National Society of New England Women.—We will be very glad to have you add our name to the already splendid list of organizations participating in the plans of the Citizens' Committee of Welcome to the returning soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Captain Robert Nichols Chapter, Daughters of American Revolution.—This chapter wishes to be placed on record as indorsing your committee and expressing its desire to help in the plans for welcoming the men. We are anxious to do our part.

Army and Navy Club of the City of New York.—We are very glad indeed to add the name of this club to your organization.

Association of 11th Engineers.—At a meeting of our Executive Board held on Jan. 17, a motion was unanimously carried that the members of our organization, composed of the relatives of the 11th Engineers now in France, join the Independent Citizens' Committee of Welcome.

Mary Garrett Hay, the suffrage leader; Powhatan Bolling, Francis Rogers, Alfred E. Henderson, John M. Kilgoud, and Percival G. William, Jr., wrote letters praising the work of the Independent Committee. Mr. William also gave out his reply to the invitation to become a member of the Mayor's Committee. He wrote:

"I am informed that William R. Hearst is a member of this committee, and more or less active in its management. Mr. Hearst's policies relating to Americanism, as revealed at the recent hearings in Washington, determine me to conclude that my Americanism is too far advanced for me to associate on this occasion with Mr. Hearst. Therefore I feel it a duty to the returning American forces to decline membership on this committee, which under other circumstances would have been a pleasure, and in my decision I am not subtracting from my loyalty to this country or to her troops."

Others who have joined the committee are John Williams, Vice President of the Irving Trust Company; Charles F. Guyan, Joseph M. Price, George A. Thayer, J. C. F. Jacoby, Florence Howe Hall, Mrs. Hubbell Rowland, A. H. Morris, Alfred E. Ommen, Axel Josephson, Charles A. Boston, President of the Maryland Society; Mrs. Henry F. Osborn, Dr. James Pedersen, the Rev. Dr. Henry Mottett, Robert A. B. Dayton, Dr. John W. Bartlett, Albert Behning, George Adair Clarke, Edwin C. Walder, Alexander Cumming, and Caspar Whitney.

A meeting of the executive sub-committee will be held at 415 Madison Avenue at 5 o'clock this afternoon to consider plans for future work.

Mass Meeting Commends Burning of Publications.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Jan. 19.—At a public meeting this afternoon, attended by representatives of various churches and organizations of the city, at which prominent men made addresses, the Rev. George H. Chesbro, pastor of the Hedding M. E. Church, denounced the Hearst publications and commended the G. A. R. for their recent action in buying up and publicly burning all the Hearst papers on sale in the city.

"I do not see," said Mr. Chesbro, "how any right-minded, conscientious person can continue to read such a publication. Every citizen of Poughkeepsie should stand behind the Grand Army in the fight against William Randolph Hearst and refuse to read any paper in which his views are expounded. I am glad to see the number of buttons proclaiming, 'Do Not Read Hearst Papers' growing more numerous on our city streets." Great applause greeted his statement.

NEED CANS FOR CITY'S MILK.

Receipts Decrease Slightly Pending Adjustments Following Strike.

Although the receipts of milk in New York City yesterday were 227,413 quarts less than the receipts for Saturday, when 1,587,413 quarts were received, Health Commissioner Copeland said last night that he expected the city to be receiving its normal supply within a few days now that the milk strike has been settled. It was only a question, he said, of getting the cans back from the distant States over which they were scattered by the distributers during the strike and forwarding them to the members of the Dairymen's League.

Commissioner Copeland expressed regret that the settlement of the strike did not carry with it a substantial decrease in the price of milk to the consumer, saying that the price of 16 cents a quart was exorbitant. Asked about the percentage of butter fat in the milk that was received from a distance during the strike, he said that the milk met the requirements in this regard as well as from the standpoint of bacterial count.

I. Elkine Nathans, Secretary of the New York Milk Conference Board, representing distributers, said yesterday that the distributers and manufacturers were pleased with the terms of the settlement, although they did agree to pay $4.01 a hundred pounds for milk for the remainder of January. He said that the main thing the distributers were fighting for was the principle of market conditions and supply and demand governing the price to be paid for milk, and that this point the distributers won.

It was said at the offices of the Dairymen's League that telegrams were sent to the farmers on Syturday telling them that the producers had won the strike, and that league milk would begin arriving in the city this morning for distributers who did not receive any from league members during the strike.

Dr. Jonathan C. Day, Commissioner of Markets, spoke last night at the Lenox Avenue Unitarian Church, 121st Street and Lenox Avenue, on the subject, "Milk and Markets for Six Million." He said that a bill soon would be introduced in the Legislature aimed to correct some of the milk evils and provide for a permanent milk commission.
